Gov't, Attorney-General setting up 'special teams' to combat violent crime

Portugal's Ministry of Internal Affairs and Attorney-General's office have agreed to set up joint "special teams" to fight violent crime, a ministry official was reported as saying by the Lusa News Agency on Wednesday evening.

The official told Lusa, Internal Administration Minister Rui Pereira would formally present the plan sometime before the weekend at a meeting of the Security Coordination Office.

The joint initiative was agreed in meetings between Pereira and Attorney-General Fernando Pinto Monteiro, the official said.

The move by the Socialist government came on the heels of strong public criticism from the main opposition Social Democrats that Prime Minister José Sócrates' cabinet was failing to deal with a mounting wave of violent crime, including bank robberies.

On Thursday, Government officials revealed that violent crime had risen by ten percent during the first half of 2008 compared with the same period last year.

The director for the Office of Security Coordination explained that violent crime had "risen slightly below ten percent", but stressed that these types of crime only represent in the region of six percent of all crimes committed in Portugal.

According to Leonel Carvalho, 2007 was the best year in six when assessing crime statistics, which has resulted in an even greater inflation of figures so far in 2008.

The statistics released by Mr Carvalho do not reflect the recent crime spree, where dozens of banks have been robbed, coupled with a number of shootings, especially in poorer areas and council estates located on the outskirts of Lisbon.

Electronic chip for cars gets presidential go-ahead

President of the Republic Cavaco Silva publicly announced a decree that allows the Government to legislate the mandatory installation of an electronic chip in every vehicle. Despite heavy criticism for violations of drivers' privacy, the law will be implemented.

According to the Government, the chip, located on number plates, will only be used to ease the workload for safety forces, who will be able to access information on inspections and car insurance details. The chip will also allow the quicker identification of abandoned vehicles and ones that have been in accidents, as well as being used to pay tolls and other road fees.

The President's announcement on the website www.presidencia.pt states the decree touches a "very delicate area regarding the safeguarding of citizens' private lives" and pointed out that the technology must only be used for purposes connected to road traffic control and that the registered data must be properly protected.

Emergency landing at Faro airport

On Wednesday a Thomas Cook flight carrying 210 people from London, UK, to Fuerteventura in the Canary Islands, was forced to make an emergency landing at Faro airport, at around 12h30, due to an oil leak in one of the engines.

Despite Faro Airport activating a 'yellow alert', no emergency vehicles were necessary on the runway and no injuries were sustained from what was described as 'routine procedure' and a 'normal landing'.

Flight TCX037K left Gatwick, London, at around 09h00 that morning, carrying 204 passengers and six crew members.

The Boeing 757 was forced to land more than three hours later into its journey.

It is one of at least four emergency landings to have been made at Faro this year, and the latest in a string of international incidents that have occurred over the past 10 days.

After landing passengers remained in the airport until around 19h00 that evening, before Thomas Cook decided to take them to a nearby hotel where they stayed overnight.

Technicians at Faro airport were unable to fix the problem so a new aircraft was flown in from the UK and passengers resumed their journey the following morning.

Thomas Cook was founded on September 1st 1999 and started flying on March 27th, 2000. Its fleet comprises 42 planes; 22 Airbus and 20 Boeings.

EDP signs accord to sell power from US wind farm

Portuguese electricity utility, EDP Renováveis, via its Horizon Wind Energy subsidiary, announced on Thursday it has signed a long-term power purchase accord to sell energy from an American wind farm.

EDP's agreement with

Snohomish County Public Utility District is for sale of energy from the Wheat Hill Wind Farm, located in Gilliam County, Oregon, with an installed capacity of 96.6 megawatts, it was reported by the Lusa News Agency.

ATM stolen from Cascais court

During the early hours of Thursday morning Cascais' courthouse was broken into and an ATM machine stolen from inside.

Cascais PSP officers confirmed the incident though did not reveal further details.

Court employees, raised the alarm as they were the first people to enter the building at 6am, after the security guards finished their shift at midnight.

Sources described how the main doors had been smashed through and the ATM machine, which was situated in the court's lobby, taken in its entirety, leaving no trace.

"The alarm was not set off and the security cameras are of poor quality. A person can be standing one metre away and not be recognisable", said one employee.

Due to police procedures, the court was an hour late opening that morning, though police remained in the building to continue gathering information.

Madeleine detectives' axing denied

Kate and Gerry McCann, parents of missing toddler Madeleine McCann have denied they have decided to axe private investigators Oakley International following allegations the company has drained the McCann's fund of nearly half a million pounds.

Reports on Sunday claimed they were supported in doing so by Madeleine Fund underwriter Brian Kennedy, a self-made millionaire, who was also said to be dissatisfied with the investigators' work.

It was said he considered their approximate £100,000-per-month fee "excessive" for the results that were being obtained.

This has since been refuted. A written entry on the official

'Find Madeleine' website said, "In the light of articles in some UK Sunday newspapers this week-end, we feel it is appropriate to comment briefly on our relationship with the investigation company Oakley International.

"We appointed them several months ago to investigate the disappearance of Madeleine McCann. We continue to work with them to this end. The working relationship is managed by Brian Kennedy, who also confirms the relationship with Oakley International continues to be good and that it remains entirely focused on the search for Madeleine".

Oakley International, which is made up of ex-British special forces officers and has FBI contacts, won the contract over the London-based Red Defence International (RDI), though one of the employees, 47-year-old communications expert known as Mr. Halligen, is listed as being involved with both companies.

Weekend reports in the UK claim Halligen is given as the 'contact name' for Oakley International Group, a company registered in Washington DC as the manufacturer of search and navigation equipment, and is also, reportedly, a director of RDI.

The company says it has annual sales of around €45,000 and only one employee, which appears to be Mr. Halligen.

Initial reports alleged that the day after a crisis meeting last week with the Madeleine Fund administrators, Mr. Halligen resigned as a director of RDI.

Previously the McCann Fund had employed a Spanish detective agency called Metodo 3, who were also axed after claims they would 'find Madeleine before Christmas' failed.

A McCann spokesperson said yesterday, "Kate and Gerry, the fund and their backers have always sought to employ the very best people and resources in the ongoing search for Madeleine".

A search that is, according to the McCanns, still continuing.

Portugal pavilion gets 600k visitors at Zaragoza Expo

Over 600,000 people have already visited Portugal's pavilion at Expo Zaragoza 2008, an event running under the feel-good banner of water and sustainable development, an official said. Rolando Borges Martins, head of Portugal's exhibition stand in the north-eastern Spanish city, said 77% of total visitors to the pavilion have been Spanish and around 13% Portuguese, with French and Brazilians accounting for the remainder. Portugal's pavilion in Zaragoza tells the story of the Iberian neighbours' shared water resources, particularly the Tagus, Douro and Guadiana cross-border rivers.

Baby chokes to death

A 19 month old baby died of asphyxiation last week after it choked on an olive in Angeja, Albergaria-a-Velha. "It all happened so quickly" said friends of the parents. When they realised the baby was in trouble, the parents tried to help and called 112 immediately. An Emergency Medical (INEM) team arrived shortly after but they were unable to clear the baby girl's respiratory canal and she died shortly after arriving at Infante D. Pedro Hospital, in Aveiro. The parents' friends could not hide their emotions: "What was meant to be a happy day ended in a tragic way."

Group attacks football team

The GNR are investigating an attack carried out by a group, armed with baseball bats and knives, on a football team that was playing an away game at Moledo, Caminha, on Sunday. Colonel-Lieutenant Branco, of Viana do Castelo GNR, said the attack was most likely motivated by a disturbance between assistants and players of a game in the same tournament, held on the Saturday. One of the players was treated in hospital and received eight stitches to a head wound. The group, of around eight, barged into the game area and, after the attack took place, escaped in two Smart cars, being caught later by the GNR.

Water bills might increase due to investments

Current water bills families pay include water supply, sanitation of residual water and management of urban residues. In the near future, water bills might rise to pay for investments in modernization and expansion of water infrastructures. Jaime Melo Baptista, President of IRAR (Water and Residue Regulating Institute), says the average €15 paid by Portuguese families is generating an unacceptable and unsustainable situation.

Three assailants kill woman for €10

Three men beat an 80 year old lady to death and seriously injured her husband just to steal €10 in cash and a shotgun last week, in Ferreira do Zêzere, Tomar. Late Friday afternoon, Manuel Marçal Silva, 77 years old, heard a knock on the door and was struck to the floor when he opened it. The gang continued to violently attack him till he was unconscious and then went for his wife and mercilessly beat her to death. They were forced to tell the attackers where they kept their belongings and all they were able to find was €10 and a shotgun. Their grandson was the first to arrive at the scene.

Catholics pray against abortion

Catholics prayed for all the victims of abortion on Monday night outside Faro, Portimão, Leiria, Guimarães and Braga Hospitals. It is the third consecutive month Catholics, from all over the country had gathered outside private and public hospitals to pray. The invitation for the 'Watch' arose from an Internet blog of the movement 'Portugal Pro-Life' and is now being published on several other sites. Luís Botelho Ribeiro, coordinator of the movement, is collecting 7,500 signatures to deliver to the Constitutional Court to create a new political party.

Portuguese are Eco-Friendly vehicle purchasers

When buying new cars, Portugal is the European country which chooses vehicles that produce the least CO₂. The study, carried out by the European Federation for Transport and Environment (T&E), compared 18 countries and Portugal came first in the EU for having the 'cleanest' automotive fleet. According to 'Quercus', the environmental association connected to T&E, Portugal was placed first because Portuguese like to buy vehicles that consume less fuel, therefore buying smaller cars that have lower carbon emissions. Adding to the 'cost' factor is the fact eco-friendly cars pay only 60% of the road tax as well.

Shot with daughter on lap

A thirty year old woman was shot in S. Roque neighbourhood, in the centre of Porto, by her husband this week. According to witnesses an argument broke out between the couple and the husband started kicking his wife, who had their four month old daughter on her lap. After assaulting her, the man drew a gun and shot her five times, once in the head. The husband continued to kick her as she laid lifeless on the floor. Emergency services were able to resuscitate her and she was taken to S. João hospital in a serious condition. The man escaped by car but was caught minutes later.

Portugal has second highest police ratio in EU

According to a survey carried out by the United Nations Organization (ONU), Portugal is the second country in the EU with most police officers per inhabitant.

According to the ONU, in Portugal there is an average 4.7 police officers per thousand inhabitants. On a global scale, Portugal is the seventh nation with most policing per citizen.

However, faced with a recent rise in violent crime, the Opposition has called for Home Affairs Minister Rui Pereira to comment on the surge.

In turn Minister Pereira has acknowledged he is aware of the rise in crime and has guaranteed he wants "more police on the streets, which are more visible, stronger, with adequate weapons, and more criminal investigation, associated with the patrolling".

According to official figures from the Ministry for Home Af-airs, as of May the country's security forces presently comprise 47,000 full-time officers, which places Portugal ahead of countries like Kazakhstan, Spain, and Finland.

According to the global survey, which takes into consideration 48 countries, Portugal is only outdone by countries such as Italy, Hong Kong and the Dominican Republic, which have, on average, between six and seven police per every 1,000 habitants.

And despite Portugal's national average being of 4.7 officers per every 1,000 habitants, according to political party CDS-PP, in Sintra there is just one police officer per 2,009 habitants.

Experts concerned Europe's pine trees may be wiped out

According to emerging reports, Europe's pine forests are at risk from a killer bug that started in Portugal and which has already caused ecological catastrophes in east Asia.

Tens of thousands of trees have already died in Portugal and officials and experts fear that pine wilt disease, which has become out of control in the south-west corner of the continent, could spread further. Two species of pine are susceptible: maritime pine, which makes up almost a quarter of Portugal's forests, and Scots pine, the most widespread pine species in Europe, often used for Christmas trees.

PSD deputy Luís Carloto

Marques has considered the scenario a "catastrophe", and "worrying" as over the past ten years 300 million euros has been invested in controlling pine tree plagues by felling and burning.

German shot in head at Boliqueime train station

A German tourist was shot in the head by a young man after mistakenly getting off a train at the Boliqueime train station instead of Ferreiras, where he intended to spend the day at Zoomarine with a friend.

Ruffert Gunter (64) was holidaying in Lagos. He and a 60-year-old friend had decided to spend the day at Zoomarine, in Guia, Albufeira, and caught the 08h20 train.

Two unruly men, said to be in their 20s, also boarded in Lagos, and, after causing disruption on the train, were asked by the conductor to disembark at Boliqueime.

After disembarking and leaving the station, at around 09h45, the two men set about the German tourists, trying to take their cameras and backpacks. Upon resisting, one of the two pulled out a gun and shot the elder German in the head.

His friend, who had managed to run from the attack, stood by in shock as Gunter lay motionless on the floor, covered in blood.

A witness told newspaper Correio da Manhã how they had overheard the assailant saying "Now we can go. I've killed him".

The witness called emergency services and within minutes an INEM rescue team was on the scene. They stabilized the victim before rushing him to Faro Hospital, where he received successful neuro surgery.

A representative of the German Embassy in Lisbon, Consular Director Herr Schueller, told The Portugal News on Wednesday, "We are aware of the situation. We are in touch with the police and the hospital and we know that he is not yet awake. Yesterday we asked police if any progress had been made with regards to the assailants. We know the victim's identity, but we have no further information".

Earlier this week Faro Hospital representatives described the victim's condition as "stable but with a reserved prognosis".

GNR officers formed a unit in Boliqueime, comprising dozens of men, vehicles, horses, motorbikes and sniffer dogs, though no breakthroughs were made in identifying the assailants, who remain at large.

PJ police have launched an investigation into the incident.

Dr. António Pina, head of the Regional Tourism Entity ERTA, described the incident as an "act of criminal insanity", though he does not believe it should affect the Algarve's status as a safe destination.

A recent rise in violent crimes, particularly in the Algarve and Lisbon, has left the Government in a precarious position.

Reinforcing policing in the Algarve, one of Portugal's most popular tourist destinations, is standard procedure during summer, though numbers have for a long time been the subject of great debate.

PSP and GNR security forces have been granted €400 million to update their services. Next year €29 million will be spent on new headquarters for both services, with €12.5 million being spent on vehicles, €11 million on vigilance systems and five million euros on weapons.

Tragedy returns to Tua train tracks

A train carrying 48 people on the Tua line, Northern Portugal, derailed for around 30 metres, falling into a four-metre-deep trench, killing one passenger and injuring 44.

Locals search the scene of a train accident in Mirandela, north of Portugal last Friday. The train was going from Tua to Mirandela and derailed near the village of Brunheda just after 11:00 am, causing the death of a 47 year old woman and injuring about 50 others. (Photo: EPA/Estela Silva)

The accident occurred approximately one kilometre after the Brunheda station, at Carrazada de Ansiães, and is the fourth serious incident to take place on the same stretch of railway in a year and a half.

Most of the passengers travelling on board the train were visitors to that part of the country, a handful of whom were foreign, the majority being Portuguese tourists.

The only fatality sustained in this latest tragedy was that of a 47-year-old woman, who was flung out of the carriage as it derailed, and was killed instantly, crushed between the locomotive and the ground.

Minutes later local fire brigades arrived with ambulances and INEM medical emergency teams.

Those injured were divided amongst various hospitals, including Vila Real, Mirandela and Bragança.

Public Works and Transport Minister Mário Lino has vowed that if safety cannot be instated, "the line will be closed indefinitely".

He ordered an investigation into the cause of the accident, claiming that every month the line is checked by foot, and that every morning a small engine runs along the tracks to inspect them.

In 2007 a landslide caused a train to derail on the same track, killing three people and causing the line to close for a year. In April 2008 a security vehicle that was checking the Brevina stretch of line was also hit by a landslide. Three workers were injured. In June 2008 a carriage derailed between Abrenhada and Tua, close to where this latest incident occurred, four kilometres from its final destination, slightly injuring one passenger.

Deaths projected to outnumber births in the EU

The population in the European Union is projected to increase from 495 million in 2008 to 521 million in 2035, and thereafter gradually decline to 506 million in 2060, figures published this week have shown.

The annual number of births is projected to fall over the period 2008-2060, while at the same time the annual number of deaths is projected to continue rising. From 2015 onwards deaths would outnumber births, and hence population growth due to natural increase would cease.

From this point onwards, positive net migration would be the only population growth factor.

However, from 2035 this positive net migration would no longer counterbalance the negative natural change, and the population is projected to begin to fall.

The EU population is also projected to continue to grow older, with the share of the population aged 65 years and over rising from 17.1% in 2008 to 30.0% in 2060, and those aged 80 and over rising from 4.4% to 12.1% over the same period.

The strongest population growth is projected to be found in Cyprus (+66%), Ireland (+53%), Luxembourg (+52%), the United Kingdom (+25%) and Sweden (+18%), and the sharpest declines in Bulgaria (-28%), Latvia (-26%), Lithuania (-24%), Romania (-21%) and Poland (-18%).

In 2060, the Member States with the largest populations would be the United Kingdom (77 million), France (72 m), Germany (71 m), Italy (59 m) and Spain (52 m).

In Portugal, the current population is fixed at 10.61 million, and will rise to 11.39 million in 2035 before falling to 11.26 million in 2060.

Telecom watchdog approves mobiles on planes

Anacom, the Portuguese telecommunications regulator, has this week authorised the use of mobile telephones on flights. New technology will stop mobile telephone frequencies interfering with a planes' system. However, calls will be limited to when the aircraft is flying at altitudes of no more than 3,000 metres, which is about a third the cruising altitude of commercial airlines. National airline TAP has been among the forerunners in this technology, and is expected to be among the first to make this technology available to its passengers.

Back in 2005 Siemens and the pan-European aircraft manufacturer, Airbus, announced they had joined forces in a common venture to develop technology that would enable users to make ordinary mobile phone calls in flight.

The German electrical and communications company will supply lightweight onboard base stations for the GSM mobile network and channel selectors that will ensure mobile calls do not interfere with aircraft systems or cell phone networks on the ground.

Airbus will build the technology into its existing electronics systems, market it to other airlines and service it. The two companies plan to fit a base station, linked to the terrestrial GSM network via satellite, behind the ceiling panel of a plane. The base station will receive signals from passengers' mobile phones, personal computers and organisers.

The technology is also suitable for aircraft made by Airbus rival, Boeing.

In April, national airline TAP initiated its six-month experimental period for the in-flight usage of mobile phones, a move which came as the European Commission introduced rules to harmonise conditions for the take-off of pan-European mobile communication services on aircraft.

Allowing passengers to use mobile phones on aircraft has been long-debated. It is estimated that 92 per cent of all business travellers carry their phones with them, as do 81 per cent of tourists.

Around 54 per cent of all business passengers said they would use their phone whilst on board if they could, as opposed to 41 per cent who said they enjoyed relaxing whilst flying.

In addition, nearly one-third of international business travellers surveyed were willing to pay between 2.5 and 5.0 euros a minute for in-flight mobile phone services.

Current estimates are that calls should cost in the region of around 2.0 euros a minute.

Charges would be stipulated by each passenger's respective mobile phone operator, available to all as long as a roaming service is activated.

However, the European Commission in April introduced rules to harmonise conditions for the take-off of pan-European mobile communication services on aircraft.

It considered "in-flight mobile telephony needs a regulatory 'one-stop shop' to operate throughout Europe; one regulatory decision for all European airspace is required" said Viviane Reding, the EU's Telecoms Commissioner.

"Now we expect operators to be transparent and innovative in their price offerings. In-flight mobile phone services can be a very interesting new service especially for those business travellers who need to be ready to communicate wherever they are, wherever they go", adding: "However, if consumers receive shock phone bills, the service will not take-off".

She also called on airlines and operators to "create the right conditions on board aircraft to ensure that those who want to use in-flight communication services do not disturb other passengers."

Passengers who are concerned that a peaceful flight might be disturbed, technology is now available which will allow crewmembers to switch the onboard mobile phone system into different modes, such as text only, to ensure some quiet times in the cabin.

Employees of the Ministry of Justice, Fafe Council and the company responsible for the work will be propping up the remaining part of the ceiling to avoid further accidents.

Sonae buying abroad

Worten, electronics brand of Sonae, is looking to broaden its market to Spain as it has just bought Boulanger Espana. Involved in the transaction are nine stores, covering 22,000 square metres, and three store licenses. Amazing sales figures, around €100 million, are predicted from the group owned by Belmiro de Azevedo, Portugal's second richest man.

Three Portuguese expats suspected in Cape Verde drugs laundering

Cape Verdean police have prohibited three Portuguese residents of the archipelago from leaving the islands after questioning them on suspicion of laundering drugs money, the weekly A Semana reported at the weekend. The three Portuguese nationals and three Cape Verdeans were detained last week and arraigned in court Friday on "strong suspicion" of involvement in laundering funds from "international drugs trafficking", the island newspaper said, citing the Judiciary Police. The police investigation, begun more than one year ago, led to searches of nine residences and businesses owned by the six suspects and the seizure of seven vehicles and property worth about €550,000, A Semana said.

North and central Portugal cheaper

A study carried out by Deco, consumer rights watchdog, at supermarkets throughout the country revealed cheaper prices can be found at the North and Centre of the country. The study compared 63,452 prices, of 570 stores in 114 cities. It showed that products from shops on the same street, or nearby, have very different prices and significant savings can be made if the right choice is made. For the first time ever the study also took into consideration Spanish shops near the border, but concluded that it is hardly ever worth travelling the extra distance.

Lisbon official in Bissau to evaluate CPLP aid

State Secretary for Foreign Affairs João Gomes Cravinho, representing Lisbon's chair of the CPLP Lusophone bloc, was in Guinea-Bissau this week for a series of meetings with senior Bissau and international officials. Diplomatic sources said Portugal's No. 2 diplomat would meet representatives from the Guinea-Bissau International Contact Group, comprising Bissau's main cooperation partners, as well as President João Bernardo Vieira and Prime Minister Carlos Correia. In sending the Lisbon diplomat to Bissau the CPLP (Community of Portuguese Language Countries) "seeks to strengthen its monitoring and assistance" to the West African member of the bloc, diplomatic sources told the Lusa News Agency.

São Tomé carrier resumes non-stop Lisbon flights

STP Airways, national carrier of São Tomé and Príncipe, resumes scheduled flights to Lisbon next week using an aircraft owned by Portuguese airline Euroatlantic, the majority shareholder in the company. STP Airways chairman Felisberto Neto told the Lusa News Agency the weekly Lisbon-São Tomé flight will be operated using a Boeing 767. Euroatlantic will provide a smaller aircraft to operate STP Airways' routes to Gabon, Cameroon and Equatorial Guinea, he added. Euroatlantic manages São Tomé's national airline and holds a 37 percent stake in the company, to the 35 percent held by the São Tomé state and 17 percent stakes held apiece by Banco Equador and GIAS.

Private clinics growing

Portuguese are opting for more health insurance and resorting more to private clinics which, according to a study released on Monday, during the course of 2007 which generated a €690 million revenue. The study 'Sanidade Privada', carried out by Spanish company DBKA, has optimistic predictions for the sector. There are forty clinics in Portugal that offer around 2,200 beds, with Lisbon region having the highest concentration: 16 private centres and 1,300 beds. Just like the clinics, insurance companies are earning more: €440 million in revenue in 2007, 7.8 percent more than the previous year.

EU looks to boost cross-border securities transactions

The European Commission's Legal Certainty Group (LCG) has put forward solutions to legal barriers related to the cross-border holding and settlement of securities. The solutions proposed in its report, entitled 'Second Advice', are expected to lead to an improved and harmonised legal framework for the holding and settlement of securities through intermediaries and for the processing of corporate actions. Furthermore, the report proposes to give issuers free choice between European Central Securities Depositories.

Highway robbers in crime of the century

Following the audacious hold-up late last week of a security van transporting an undisclosed amount of cash (see last week's edition of The Portugal News), it has emerged that the van could have been carrying as much as 2.5 million euros.

Some observers have already termed it the crime of the century, and while officially, there is no value attached to the robbery, media reports said this week that the van was transporting in the region of 2.5 million euros from Lisbon destined to stock up the more than 730 automatic teller machines scattered across the Algarve.

The robbery, which occurred near the Aljustrel fuel station on the A2 motorway, was noted for its precision and the professional manner in which it was conducted by five assailants.

Equipped with military-issue weaponry, thought now to have been manufactured in Eastern Europe, the group made off undetected in what now appears to have been the most lucrative robbery ever in Portugal.

The group carefully selected a blind-spot on the motorway, with the closest camera on the closely monitored motorway located at a distance of three kilometres from the crime scene.

Another reason for the group escaping undetected is that they used an emergency exit a few hundred metres down the motorway to change direction and head back towards Lisbon or the motorway linking the Alentejo with Madrid.

While cameras to the south were being watched and road-blocks set up en route to the Algarve, the assailants, unbeknown to police, were heading back the way they came.

Nails were also placed on the motorway to sabotage any police vehicles who might give chase after discovering they had been tricked.

One of the two security guards in the Prosegur van suffered minor injuries, thought to have been caused by shattered glass following the explosion.

No reports on the nationalities of the men have been revealed, but police have admitted to the possibility that the five assailants learned their trade in other European countries such as Britain or France, where crimes such as this are more common.

Military experts are assisting police detectives in their investigations.

Dry, but cooler than expected summer

Despite below average and forecast temperatures, weathermen at the Met Office have this week described this summer as having been "typical". Earlier this year, experts at the Met Office predicted a scorching summer, but have since admitted that they got it wrong, while adding their forecasts can never be seen as being 100 percent certain.

Information gathered so far reveals that while June recorded temperatures which were slightly above averages of the past three decades, thermometers in July were decidedly lower than figures attained in past years.

Similarly, August has also registered lower than expected temperatures, with rain also being minimal.

The northern and central parts of the country were most affected by below average temperatures, improving to the south.

Experts had earlier this year predicted a "complicated summer", a situation which was anticipated due to the lack of rainfall last winter in most parts of the country.

Official figures published in the spring indicated that rainfall between last September and this past January was the lowest it had seen since 1917.

Rainfall during this period was only 48 percent of the average between 1941 and 1998, data by the Water Board (Inag) showed.

Since records began, January 2008 was confirmed as the second hottest ever, while the highest temperatures ever were recorded in 1981.

Thermometers were also 1.3° above the January average, additional data shows.

Portugal was in 2006 singled out in the Stern Review as being one of the European countries that will suffer most from global warming.

"The Mediterranean will see an increase in water shortages, heat waves and forest fires. Portugal, along with Spain and Italy, will be the hardest hit, which could result in a swing northwards in summer tourism", explained the report.

The four years leading up to 2007 were the hottest on record in Portugal while the drought in 2005 and 2006 was only broken by heavy rains and floods.

But this trend was turned on its head last year as weather patterns experienced yet another dramatic shift.

The summer of 2007 was confirmed as the coolest in two decades and also the wettest this century.

Average temperatures recorded last summer were 0.5 degrees below established figures since records began, making it the coolest summer in continental Portugal since 1987.

Taking into consideration only this century, between 2001 and 2007, the difference in temperatures measured in summer is even greater, with this summer 1.9 degrees cooler than previous summers.

It was also the first summer since 1997 to have not recorded a heat wave, and so far, 2008 is on course to emulate last year's lower-than-usual temperatures.

Record-breaking number of cruise liners passing through Portugal

Portugal's ports are attracting an increasing number of international cruise ships, a number that so far this year has already beaten previously established records. Authorities have predicted that 2008 will be the best year to date.

Lisbon Port's Administrators (APL) have released figures for January to July this year, showing that 156 cruise liners docked in the capital bringing with them a total of 178,000 passengers, rises of 37 and 61 per cent respectively in comparison with last year.

On average, Lisbon welcomed five vessels per week and more than 1,100 passengers per vessel, during the first seven months of the year.

High peaks during this rise were documented in April and May, the 20th April being a historic day with seven cruise ships and more than seven thousand passengers all visiting the capital on the same day.

According to the head of APL, this is due to a growing demand within the European market, catered for via the transferring of Caribbean and American liners to European routes.

A growth has also been noted in the port of Madeira, with a yearly prediction of 282 cruise liners stopping off in Funchal. The number of passengers also rose by 27 per cent, to 109,000 so far.

Portugal's taxis giving country bad image says report

One of tourists' main complaints whilst holidaying in Portugal is the poor quality of taxi services, dirty vehicles, questionable driving and lack of communication between passengers and drivers being the main reasons for discontent.

A study compiled by consultancy company Ideiateca, which specializes in assessing the quality of services rendered in Portugal, established these results.

They were based on survey answers gathered between April and June 2008 and showed that only 23 per cent of those questioned were satisfied with Portugal's taxi service.

In general, most tourists consider the service offered by the nation's taxis is 'unprofessional', mainly because of "the style of driving, the cleanliness of the vehicle, lack of air conditioning, lack of courtesy, overcharging and difficulties in communication".

However, according to the study, in compensation, 'low prices, a feeling of safety, gastronomy, monuments and the overall niceness of the Portuguese', are qualities that most impress visitors.

Concerning hospitality, the study revealed that Northern Portugal is the most highly praised region, where 92 per cent of visitors answered they were 'satisfied' with the services offered.

Northern Portugal is followed by Lisbon and the Algarve, with 85 and 75 per cent of happy tourists, respectively.

Every year the State secretary for Tourism invests three million Euros in promoting Portugal overseas, in 17 different countries.

Madeira ferry to continue after summer

Spanish ferry operators Naviera Armas have confirmed they will continue their Portimão-Madeira-Canary Island route after the summer season, which was until now in the balance and dependent on how figures performed.

According to the company, the route's continuation is due to the "huge success" it has had since it was launched on June 13th, since when it has transported over 14,000 passengers.

Naviera Armas is now looking to "incorporate a new ferry" onto the route, one of two new vessels currently under construction.

The company also confirmed that as of May next year, "it is likely the crossing will be upped to twice a week", between the three ports, instead of being a weekly crossing, as it is at present.

Naviera Armas first started a Canary Island - Madeira crossing three years ago, this year tying the port of Portimão into its route.

Demand far surpassed expectations, and what started off as testing the waters has been confirmed as an ongoing service.

Portuguese prefer paying in cash

Despite the increased availability and use of credit and debit cards, research published this week has revealed that Portuguese still make the majority of their payments in cash. The study was conducted by research agency Marktest and took into consideration the four months leading up to June.

More than half (53.6 percent) of residents living in mainland Portugal aged over 15 and who have a bank account, told researchers they prefer to pay for goods purchased in cash.

Payments by debit cards came in second, representing 35.1 percent of the preferences among consumers.

The use of cheques is becoming increasingly less popular, and are now fourth in preferred methods of payment, with only 3.7 percent in favour. Bank transfers were third, with 4.9 percent of the total.

Last on the table are credit cards, being preferred as the method to pay 2.5 percent of all expenses incurred.

However, half (49.8 percent) of consumers aged 25 to 34 opted to use their debit cards, with cash coming in second.

Monetary payments are most popular among pensioners aged 64 and older.

These figures came from data released earlier this month by card payment institution Unicre for the first half of this year which confirmed a growing trend of Portuguese using their bank cards as a preferred option of payment.

The biggest rise has been among credit cards, which recorded an increase in their use to 9.5 percent up to June 2008.

Over the first six months of the year, transactions involving national bank cards in the country totalled 7.5 billion euros, an increase of 8.5 percent in relation to the first half of 2007.

The number of transactions made using a Portuguese bank card averaged a total of one million a day, while cards were used to make payments amounting to 41.2 million euros per day.

While the overwhelming majority of payments were made using debit cards (70 percent), use of credit cards is rising, now representing 9.5 percent compared with 7.1 percent a year ago.

This follows news that Portuguese use their bank cards more than any other European nation to pay for purchases. Of all purchases made in the country during the course of 2006 (the most recent figure), almost two-thirds (63.3 percent) were paid for by either credit or debit cards, placing Portugal at the summit of European card users.

With this total Portugal is the leader among the 27 European Union states, narrowly beating Denmark and Sweden into second and third places, respectively.

These findings were made by a special research team who conducted a survey on card payments commissioned by the European Central Bank for all transactions performed last year.

A total of 763 million payments, totalling 25.2 million euros were made using debit cards in 2006. Credit cards, on the other hand, were used to cover payments of 343.8 million transactions for a total of 15.1 million euros.

After bank cards, Portuguese prefer cheques to make payments, with roughly one in six of all transactions made using this method of payment, placing it fifth overall in the enlarged European Union.

Meanwhile, SIBS, the company that manages electronic operations of debit and credit cards, said the highest number of transactions ever with international cards, both for withdrawals and payments was recorded in Portugal last August, with expectations high that this figure will be surpassed this year.

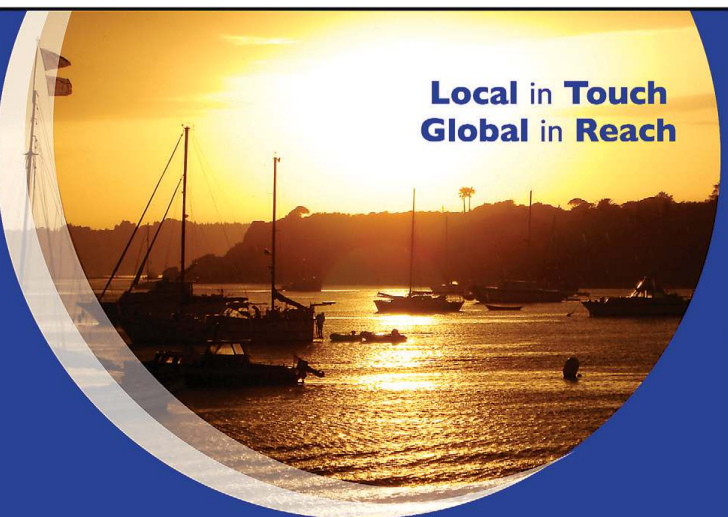

More than two million withdrawals, totalling 260 million euros were made at automatic teller machines across the country last August, which was 24 million euros more than the same month in 2006.

The number of payments made, rose from 3.5 million transactions to 3.8 million, which corresponds to a monetary value of 300 million euros.

Lisbon and Albufeira, followed by Loulé and Lagos are the cities where the highest number of transactions with foreign cards were recorded, with more than 400,000 withdrawals totalling 55 million euros.

In the Algarve, one in seven withdrawals during the month of August is made with a card issued outside Portugal.

National Monopoly champion heading for Vegas

National Monopoly champion Vitor Cândido in front of the Colombo commercial centre in Lisbon where a new version of the game was due to be launched on Wednesday. (Photo: Lusa / José Sena Goulão)

Thirty-four-year-old Vitor Cândido is a toll-booth attendant on Lisbon's 25 de Abril Bridge. He is also Portugal's national Monopoly champion, and dreams of playing in the world's largest championship, in Las Vegas.

In 2004 he represented Portugal in the Monopoly Championship in Tokyo, and he believes monopoly has helped him learn how to manage his finances in life.

Vitor has been playing monopoly for "as long as he can remember", as often as he can, and very rarely loses.

Whilst he admits "the luck of the dice" does play a role in his victories, lots of practice has helped perfect his game.

This week he played in Lisbon's Colombo shopping centre, with other Monopoly enthusiasts from around the world who gathered to try and set a new record for most people simultaneously playing Monopoly as well as celebrate the launch of a new 'World Edition' game.

At the beginning of this year, fans from around the globe voted on which cities they would most like to see represented on the first 'World Edition'.

More than five million votes determined the 22 cities, Montreal, Riga, Cape Town, Belgrade, Paris, Jerusalem, Hong Kong, Beijing, London, New York, Sydney, Vancouver, Shanghai, Rome, Toronto, Kiev, Istanbul, Athens, Barcelona, Tokyo, Taipei and Gdynia. Lisbon was a candidate, but did not make the final selection.

Renewable energies will replace the standard water and electricity companies; the pieces, community chest and chance cards being included by the various international cities.

Since 1935, more than 250 million monopoly sets have been sold worldwide, in 103 countries and 37 languages.

Greenpeace criticizes Portugal's supermarket fish

According to a Greenpeace ranking, all supermarkets operating in Portugal disrespect the purchasing of sustainable fish, with Lidl being the best positioned and the Sonae group, which own Modelo and Continente, as the worst.

Based on the 'Red List' for fish species on the brink of extinction, which include tuna and codfish from the Atlantic, Greenpeace sent all of Portugal's leading supermarkets a questionnaire, where purchasing criteria were examined and asked what sort of information on sustainable fishery was made available to clients.

"Most of the supermarkets didn't answer, and that gave them negative points. But we went to the supermarkets and verified their purchasing policies, fish packaging and if they were selling any 'Red Listed' species. Based on our findings we put together the ranking", said Paloma Colmenarejo during a press conference on board Greenpeace's Arctic Sunrise, which was docked at Alcantara, Lisbon, at the end of a three month 'Ocean' campaign.

Despite only satisfying 40 per cent of Greenpeace's point-awarding criteria, LIDL ranked first place on the listing of Portuguese supermarkets though all national chains failed to comply with minimum requisites.

In last position was the Sonae group, which scored only 1.81 per cent.

Greenpeace had stressed concerns that in Portugal supermarkets do not have written policies on purchasing sustainable fish and that whilst some have removed endangered fish species from their shelves, others are not working towards systematic sustainability.

"Portuguese supermarkets are allies in helping destroy the oceans and will not commit to sustaining fish products", said Greenpeace.

"Many of them claim it is impossible to identify the origins of the fish. This cannot be true, as it is only possible to know if the fishing was legal if the fish's origins are known".

In Portugal supermarkets represent 70 per cent of the nation's fish purchases, 80 per cent of which is sold fresh, 12 per cent frozen and eight per cent conserved, according to Greenpeace's data.

Tourism association gains power in licensing

The licensing and/or authorisation of developments and activities relating to the tourism trade will, as of this week, be subject to consideration from the Regional Algarve Tourism Entity (ERTA), which has replaced the RTA – Regional Tourism Board – headed by former Faro Civil Governor Dr. António Pina.

Dr. Pina is pleased with the new competencies the region has been awarded, though ERTA's thoughts on projects will not be considered ultimate rulings.

He also said that more clarity is needed where regarding who is responsible for entertainment.

The government has assured the ERTA that it will not lose any input when choosing and deciding the yearly summer line up.

The entity newly-created by the government, will also have a say in the management of funds and funding of projects relating to tourism.

However, Eldérico Viegas, of the AHETA regional Algarve resort and hotel association, believes the Government was "not as ambitious as it could have been", and that ERTA should have more "effective power of decision", and not just the right to a say in matters.

Whether or not local city halls will adhere to ERTA's opinions will be decided and voted on by municipal assemblies within the next month.

Third generation PlayStation Portable arriving

Sony has announced it will launch the new and improved PSP (PlayStation Portable), the PSP-3000, in October. The new console has an improved LCD screen and an integrated microphone.

The new PSP will be available worldwide and in Europe it will cost €199 whilst in the U.S.A. it will be $199 USD. It is PSP's third model in just under four years, and it will have the same defining characteristics, design and functionality, as its predecessor, the 'Slim and Light' PSP.

New technology included in the PSP-3000 is the 4.3 inch LCD screen with an anti-reflection film, allowing its user to see the screen better, even in illuminated areas. The higher contrast and wider range of colours also gives images and videos more natural colours. Thanks to the integrated microphone, the PSP can be used as an Internet phone, using Skype software, as well as being able to pick up wireless Internet (Wi-Fi).

In its first months on sale, it will only be available in three colours, black, pearly white and silver.

Families cut down spending

For the first time in five years, Portuguese families have cut down considerably in purchasing goods, consuming 0.4% less than the same month last year.

In June this year, consumption of food and goods stagnated, and, for the first time since 2003, in July it dropped.

To put it into perspective, in 2003 the Portuguese economy was in a recession and families dropped domestic spending consecutively for eight months. Only in 1983 was a similar scenario registered.

This week, the National Institute of Statistics had a shock when figures revealed that consumer trust has hit a 22 year low, at a time when traders also complained of weak sales. Facts that can be explained by the high unemployment rate, inflation, successive rises in interest rates and infrequent salary raises.

In July, the economy grew only 0.3% compared to the same month as last year and now the stagnation period is coming, according to advanced indicators for the economy who forecast the industrial production, commercial sales, external commerce and families' financial status.

For the next three months, banks foresee stricter controls for giving credit to families or businesses because the banks themselves are expecting some difficulties in accessing money from international markets, mainly due to the lack of growth of deposits and Portuguese families not able to save.

Boots' products on sale in Portuguese pharmacies

As of September, well-known British manufacturer's Boots are to start selling their products in Portugal, in pharmacies around the country.

After weighing up other options, Portugal and France were the two countries chosen by Boots to kick off their international expansion.

Also tested for expansion were Italy and Spain but it was Portugal and France that pharmaceutical distribution giant Alliance Boots (created by Alliance UniChem and Boots merging) chose to start branching out.

In the UK the products will retain their original Boots name, but in Portugal and France the marketing team decided to add on the word 'Laboratories', therefore the seven products that will initially be sold abroad will be branded 'Boots Laboratories'.

This range will include day and night creams, and the blockbuster anti-aging serum that immediately sold out when it was placed on sale in the UK in 2007.

Boots' launch in Portugal is being headed by Alliance Healthcare, which aims to place the brand amongst the top-five best-selling national dermatologic products within the next three years.

Scrapping vehicles saves Lisbon thousands

Last week Lisbon Council sent its first vehicles to the junkyard, part of the 168 vehicles planned to be scrapped. This measure will save the council €71,000 a month.

"It is a financial and environmental measure that will allow the council to save over €800,000 a year and also reduce carbon emissions by 360 tonnes a year," said Lisbon's Vice-President.

He stressed that there will also be a renovation of the existing fleet, as well as a more frequent use of public transport by Municipal workers.

On 22nd August 46 vehicles, all of them with their lease contracts ending, were delivered to a junkyard to be scrapped. Of the 122 vehicles remaining, 92 will be scrapped in September and the final 30 in November.

The Vice-President also added that by the end of the year ten diesel rubbish trucks will be replaced by vehicles that run on gas.

London Olympics 2012 en route

Lisbon's British Embassy joined London's celebrations as organisers of the upcoming Olympic games by hoisting the Olympic flag on the façade of the Embassy's building. The ceremony was conducted by United Kingdom's Ambassador, SE Alexander Ellis, together with China's Ambassador, SE Gao Kexiang, last Monday at midday.

As the Beijing Olympic games ended, the Olympic flag began its voyage from Beijing to London. Hundreds of locations throughout the U.K. have celebrated the occasion by hoisting the 'London 2012' flag, as well as at British Embassies, British Councils, Armed Forces and diplomatic missions in foreign countries.

Buckingham Palace will be hosting a special event for the raising of the flag as well.

Greenpeace docks in Lisbon

After three months on the high seas searching for illegal fishing boats, the Arctic Sunrise has returned to port, more specifically Lisbon, with stories from the Mediterranean.

The Arctic Sunrise ice-breaker has been navigating the Mediterranean for the past three months searching for illegal fishing boats, persuading governments to create marine reserves and alerting consumers and suppliers about the rise of fish species at risk of extinction.

Volunteers and activists, with ages ranging from 20 to 60, work shifts on the boat to keep the engines running for days on end. They are only allowed to stay onboard for three months, having to stay on dry land for the next three months for the opportunity to return to sea to fight for the future of our planet, on one of the three Greenpeace ships.

Peter Bouket, Captain of the Arctic Sunrise, 58 years old, has had a sea bound life: "I have been with Greenpeace for 10 years, but I have been going out to sea since I was 16." He is one of six Greenpeace captains.

Stories from the crew are endless and Texas Joe, a radio operator, remembers the time the Arctic Sunrise was deliberately attacked by a Japanese whaling ship twice its size: "I was on one of the Arctic's dingies we had placed next to a whale to avoid it being shot by the Japanese... unexpectedly they shot the harpoon and I was hit...". He does not hide his fear of arrest or of being injured on a mission, but says "We have to disobey rules in some situations. If nobody does anything, everything will remain the same. Of course I'm scared of what might happen to me, especially because of my one and a half year old baby, but somebody has to watch over the future of our next generations."

The British Ambassador in Portugal, Alex Ellis (L) compliments the Chinese Ambassador in Portugal, Gao Kexiang (R), after receiving the symbolic flag for the 2012 Olympic Games that will be hoisted in London. British Embassy in Lisbon, 25th August 2008. (Photo: MIGUELA. LOPES / LUSA)

On the never-ending mission to save the oceans, the Greenpeace ship has had over 20 activists and volunteers of over 15 nationalities.

To live in line with their beliefs, food that comes onboard has to be organic or, if they do not have that choice at a port, all food is bought in small local markets, never supermarkets. Fish is not allowed on board and their rubbish is all correctly separated and recycled.

The Arctic Sunrise will be in Lisbon until mid-September. Its next mission is to Brazil and the Congo to fight against the illegal lumber-jacking industry.

adrenaline inhaler as I almost died from a sting when I was 15. With no stings for the past 40-plus years, I forgot about the inhaler. Until last Friday when a bee attached itself to my left arm, stung me and died, as I hear bees do after they finish their nasty business. At first I ignored the pain. I played 18 (lousy) holes of golf then swam in the sea that evening. But the next day I woke up with a lower arm swollen like a balloon and red spots all over my skin. I've been spending the weekend with ice packs, pharmacy prescribed medications and home remedies I found on the internet. But, if my arm isn't better by tomorrow, I'll have to face the wrath of the dermatologist. I'm already wondering if she sent the bee to bite me. That it carried her warning about the dangers of the summer sun.

peeking out of long sleeves, pants and skirts.

But this summer I defied her. It was my first July and August in Portugal. Now I'm berating myself for abandoning my adopted country in the season when it's at its best. Other summers I can remember: last summer in Paris with three days of sunshine and the rest shrouded in clouds. No problem with the sun that year: I came home as pale as when I left. Then there was the summer in Florida. The median temperature in Sarasota that summer was 35°. But the heat was nothing compared to the humidity, well over 80% every day. We woke up at 5 am and went for an early walk only to take refuge in Don's house after 7 am until the sun set and we could set foot outside again. Plus the constant air conditioning, a must for anyone who braces a Florida summer, gave me sore throats and an allergy that took me months to shed.

"Never again," I told Don as I boarded the plane pale as an albino and headed for Lisbon.

Then there was the summer in the south of France. We'd heard tales of paradise on the Côte and decided to sample their summer sun for ourselves. Yet another surprise came as the beach in Nice was filled with rocks like craters that populate the moon. We decided to swim anyway only to leave the water the first week there with cuts and bruises on our feet. Finally, two weeks later, we found a store selling shoes designed to protect against the dangers of Nice beaches and sea swimming. But by that time our summer was almost over.

With that track record of sunless summers I felt elated with the decision to stay home this one. Friends warned about the strong winds, high temperatures and overpowering crowds in Cascais. But luck came this time: the temperatures stayed in the delightful mid-20's, the high humidity never arrived and I felt thrilled to see legions of Spanish and French in town, hopefully helping merchants prop up the sagging Portuguese economy.

In all, it was a great summer filled with lots of defiance: I got more sun than I should have; swam in the ocean which my Portuguese friend calls "filthy"; and walked in the early morning and late evening which another deemed "dangerous." In fact, I thought I'd escaped the dangers of the summer sun until two days ago when I got a nasty bee sting on my lower left arm. As a teenager I was allergic to bees. I had to carry an

If Vitamin D3 is the longev-ity element, then the sun-worshipping Portuguese will live forever. Vitamin D3 is best absorbed from natural sunlight, during non-peak hours if possible, so as not to incur premature ageing or develop skin cancers. My dermatologist frowned when I came to her with one of many web-based articles on the hot topic of D3. She didn't call it a fad but let me with more of a warning about sunshine exposure than encouragement. As I left her office, she emphasized her views with statistics: "Portugal, after Australia, has the largest NUMBER (not percentage) of skin cancer cases in the world." First Lady visits Faro Children's Home

First Lady of Portugal Dra. Maria Alves Cavaco Silva and Director of Faro's Children's Home, Dr. Luís Villas-Boas

Some of the home's children.

On Monday, Dr. Luís Villas-Boas, director of Aboim Ascensão Children's Refuge in Faro, invited Portugal's First Lady Dra Maria Alves Cavaco Silva to visit the premises where young children with no families or abusive families are temporarily sheltered and also took advantage to launch an appeal for the creation of a national child emergency service, to be taken care of by the State.

During the First Lady's guided tour around the premises, Villas-Boas reminded people that, 23 years ago, the institution he directs was a pioneer "the first temporary home for young children at risk."

He opined that the State should take responsibility of the network because in children's rights matters the State "is the first and last responsible for the well-being of its children, either without family or with a judicially incompetent family." He also stressed the "State should support strongly entities that give help." "It is urgent to protect, to take children away without hesitation from any families or institutions in crisis or if there are doubts about the danger of the location as well as the environment" he defended.

The Aboim Ascensão Refuge

had a 74% occupancy rate this year, with the average time of shelter being 14 months per child and their average age was 30 months. The total capacity is 95 children, but between January and July 43 have left and only 29 have arrived.

During her visit, the First Lady showed concern over the number of violent cases involving children: "Even if there was only one child in these conditions in Portugal, it would be bad. As they are in the thousands, the situation is terrible," she said.

The wife of the President of the Portuguese Republic visited the shelter a few years ago but felt the necessity to return to "check how things are going" and to see the evolution it has had.

"In a place like this we can also see the country's situation" she reiterated.

International Algarve Fair, two days packed with fun and games

Live music, games, competitions, fire eaters, stunt performers, clowns, bouncy castles, face painting, human football and real life fire engines, what more could you want from a day at a family fair? You can enjoy all this and more at the International Algarve Fair, on the weekend of September 20th and 21st.

Visitors will be welcomed at the gates by entertainers, but that is just a little taster of what lies beyond the gates.

Throughout both days Circo Pequeno's brilliant team of performers will flow around the fairgrounds, mesmerizing children and adults alike with their tricks, stilt-walkers, and, in the evenings, fire-eating shows.

Tim Gomez of Circo Pequeno explained, "It will be a magical and very visual affair".

As in previous years, Circo Pequeno's team will be performing and putting on activities all day, both days, so there will always be something for children to participate in, as learning new skills and interacting are also encouraged.

"The magic of being young disappears as you get older and you don't remember, so children must enjoy being young as much as they can", Tim said.

Two more novelties this year are an Airbungee, for the more courageous, courtesy of 'Junior Satisfaction' and an inflatable Gladiator game.

Popular Puff Park will once again inflate for children to jump around on to their heart's content.

But one of the most exciting introductions to the entertainment line-up is this year's 'Human Football' championship. Enrolment of teams is still being accepted, so if you would like to have a go at winning the trophy, call 968 410 914 and put your team on the list (five people per team, at a fee of €50 per team, which will be donated to the Lagoa Bomebeiros).

Alternating between the main pavilion and the open-air grass area will be live harp music and classical guitar renditions, played at various times during the day.

On Saturday at lunchtime new band White Crow will take to the stage to set the day swinging; Saturday evening's entertainment features renowned Irish band Klonakilty, starting at 18h30.

Sunday lunchtime will feature the acclaimed Cristina Afonso and her new trio, and in the evening Hexavox, five talented instrumentalists and a gifted vocalist, will take centre stage, also starting 18h30.

For more information, contact entertainment promoters Standing Ovation on: (+351) 914 599 933.

Entrance tickets to the fair cost €3 per adult. Gates open at 11h00, at the Fatacil fairground in Lagoa.

Picasso pieces prize Portimão

'Olhar Picasso' is a first in Portugal as original pieces and an in-depth look of Picasso will be exhibited together with an array of work by Portuguese artists who were in some way influenced by the most recognized figure in 20th century art.

Many people have an immeasurable adulation for Picasso, not only for his artistic views, but also for his passion for politics and the way his pieces were both honest and accessible.

The Portugal News had the opportunity to speak to the son of Picasso's official biographer, Anthony Penrose, whom supplied most of the originals for the exhibition, as well as Rui Paes, General Coordinator of the exhibition and artist.

Anthony Penrose spent much of his childhood and adolescence staying with Pablo Picasso in the South of France. His parents - the painter Roland Penrose, who later became Picasso's official biographer and war photographer Lee Miller - were friends of the artist. Being a good friend of Picasso and choosing photography as a career, Lee Miller was able to capture Picasso in a very personal perspective, which can clearly be seen in Lee Miller's section for the exhibition with dozens of chronologically ordered photographs, during the Spanish Civil war, World War II and after the Liberation. When questioned about having her work in the same exhibition as Picasso, Anthony said "It is the first time Lee Miller's photographs have been to Portugal and it is extremely satisfying to see her represented together with Picasso."

When speaking of the other pieces, created by Portuguese artists who have been influenced by Picasso in some way, Penrose spoke highly of them "There is some wonderful work of high international standard; it is good to see how far Picasso's influence has reached." He was also impressed by the way Portimão produced such an amazing permanent structure for the exhibition "It is an amazing gallery which will make it a constant venue. It is a very bold stroke to appear in the art world like this but art investments give places interest and integrity, as well as attracting higher spending tourists. I think in future years it will be an international venue."

Rui Paes, Portuguese artist originally from South Africa and completing his MA at the Royal College of Art, praised Anthony for his dedication to his parents work and by the fact he provided Picasso originals. Speaking of the exhibition, the Coordinator said: "It is a good opportunity to approach Portuguese painting from a different perspective by not only seeing the author, but a whole line of thought and also to appreciate very good paintings."

Fatacil always a favourite affair

It is one of the Algarve's biggest events of its kind. FATACIL - an annual fair mixing traditional handicraft and industrial commerce - has over the past few decades grown from a town market to a popular event that thousands wait in anticipation for and flock to in droves.

This year was no exception and figures have not been disappointing.

No expense was spared on entertainment, and, with one of Portugal's biggest and most popular rock bands, Xutos & Pontapés, still to play on Sunday (the band is in fact a regular appearance at Fatacil and often the high-point of entertainment), figures are expected to rise significantly.

Literally everything and anything can be found at Fatacil, with hundreds of stalls selling anything from Moroccan carpets to the latest in kitchen utensils and horse-riding equipment.

Most stalls offer the experience of watching craftsmen and woman create their products from scratch, using techniques that have been passed down for hundreds of years.

Dozens of different types of traditional foods and drinks from all over Portugal can be savoured, from full meals to snacks and cocktails, and livestock including horses, cows, sheep and goats can be seen. Every night fantastic displays of horsemanship are put on for the equestrian enthusiast.

If you have not yet been to Fatacil do not miss the last chance this weekend to see one of the most impressive shows.

Quarteira protesting prostitution

Prostitution in Quarteira has been steadily rising over the past years, mainly due to the influx of immigrant women from Eastern Europe, Brazil and Africa. At the moment there are 80 street prostitutes in Quarteira, according to AIDS Support Movement.

"I have been working on street projects in contact with prostitutes for seven years and have noticed the rise in the number of prostitutes, mostly foreign ones" said a psychologist who is part of the AIDS Support Movement.

Most prostitutes start working on 'Sic Street', connecting Quarteira to Vilamoura, at dusk. They sell their services for as little as €20 and many times must settle for less as the interested parties haggle and the harsh competition forces them to accept the cheaper price.

Their clientele is extremely varied; labourers, doctors, lawyers, tourists, students and even the elderly drive down the street at an idle speed to satisfy their urge, explained the psychologist who has been helping women protect themselves from sexually transmitted diseases for the past seven years.

Quarteira's prostitutes classify Portuguese men as 'good' customers, not only because they pay on the spot, but also because they are not as aggressive as foreign citizens. For example, Romanian prostitutes do not want to sell themselves to men from their own country, especially when they are drunk, as they can become violent.

The AIDS Support Movement distributes condoms and information pamphlets teaching prostitutes how to put on a condom even if the client does not want to use one: "We teach them to put the condom on with their mouth, without the customer noticing they are putting it on" said the psychologist, stressing that it is vital that prostitutes protect themselves from contracting diseases as well as stopping their spread.

In 2007 there were 80 prostitutes working in Quarteira, 78 women and two transsexuals, 65% of them were foreign.

Many of them come to work on the famous street, famous because it was once part of a special report by SIC, thus the name 'Sic Street', for the summer season in the Algarve and when winter arrives only the local prostitutes remain, most of them working to feed their drug habit. Foreigners, on the other hand, work the street to sustain their families in their homeland.

Portimão promenade was the location of yet another successful year.

Organised by the local City Hall and Expo Arade, EM, the greatest number of visitors was registered on Sunday August 17th, the last day of the festival and its grand closing ceremony.

Following the entertainment, which boasted a star-studded line-up of national and international artists including La Fura dels Baus, Camané, Orishas, Da Weasel and Martinho da Vila, was the nightly firework display that was nothing short of impressive and lasted at least fifteen minutes each time.

Seven restaurants renowned for their sardines participated in the festival, offering regional snacks and tapas, as well as the famous fish itself. Dozens of handicraft stalls showcased the best of local produce, as well as many other stands dedicated to regional and national sweet delicacies.

Tourist injured trying to save dog from freak wave

A woman had to be airlifted to hospital after jumping from a three-metre height into the sea and suffering serious injuries whilst trying to rescue one of her three pet dogs from a freak wave on Praia dos Caneiros, Ferragudo.

The dog was reportedly caught by the freak wave that flooded many of the Algarve's beaches last week, at around 16h00 in the afternoon. One of the tourist's three pet dogs, a Yorkshire terrier, was killed in the incident.

Accompanied by two other people, a man and a girl, who escaped the incident unharmed, the woman, said to be in her 40's, was assisted in the water by a lifeguard, who found her "unable to move and with her knees covered in blood".

It is not clear whether the woman jumped onto, or was dragged by the wave into, some rocks.

She had to be evacuated by helicopter and was taken to hospital, where a source confirmed nothing was broken.

Ferragudo Marina becomes a reality

Work on the future Ferragudo Marina, which is estimated to cost around €50 million, will start in January next year and looks set to completely transform the Arade River's left bank.

The first phase should be complete within 12 months.

Minister for Economy Manuel Pinho visited the site this week to learn more about the project. According to Eurico Correia, administrator of the project's promoters Marinas do Barlavento, it will "take over an area that shows visible signs of degradation, a true garbage dump, and will be totally revamped, becoming an area of great interest for the Algarve and for the country, as well as creating three to four hundred jobs".

Pereira Coutinho, the project's main financier, was greatly complimented by Minister Pinho, who said "I congratulate you and wish the best of luck to all those who invested in one of the country's most dynamic areas, an effort involving private financiers, authorities, and the Government".

Ferragudo Marina will be built on an 18-hectare area, five of which cover water, having a capacity for 319 boats. The project includes 51 houses, 128 apartments, a five-star hotel and a shopping area".

Marinas do Barlavento suffered a blow to the project when they had to move their townhouses back 50 metres from the water front, and when eight of the houses had to be dropped, meaning a heavy loss of revenue from one of the projects most valuable aspects.

GNR tracking down car thieves

An outbreak of thefts in cars, Mercedes being the preference, has hit the Algarve. Portimão GNR identified a suspect last week and recovered stolen goods, a gun and a stolen car.

A resident at Montes de Alvor called the GNR after he saw an individual stealing the contents from a car in the vicinity. The thief managed to get away before the GNR arrived, but the car he was travelling in was identified shortly after, outside the camping park in Alvor. GNR asked the suspect for identification and when he was unable to provide it, he was taken to the GNR Post. It was there where he was identified and officers discovered he had a previous criminal record. Next to his tent at the park was another one, taken from a tourist, which he denied to be his, full of stolen goods. His car was also seized, as it was reported stolen in Sintra, and a loaded Pietro Beretta handgun was in the vehicle.

Dozens of thefts from cars have been reported in the Algarve during the past weeks Mercedes being the most favoured brand of car. The GNR suspect a gang is working together, with some sophistication as the alarm systems are usually neutralised.

In the Western Algarve, the crime wave has been felt in Portimão, Alvor, Albufeira, Armação de Pêra, Lagoa and Lagos.

Modelo Lagoa closing

Since its opening on December 13th 2006, the 3,000 square metre supermarket owned by the Sonae group has never changed hands, until now that is, although earlier takeover rumours abounded. Earlier this year there was speculation Pingo Doce would be taking over the local supermarket, but then it bought out Plus, near Lagoa's main roundabout.

This week, Modelo Lagoa informed its customers that the Portuguese owned supermarket would be changing hands.

A sign placed outside the store reads as follows: "Following the process of acquisition of the former Carrefour retail stores, your commercial centre Modelo Lagoa will close on 29th of August. This commercial centre will re-open soon with a new ownership." As a reminder, Sonae group bought all Carrefour's stores in Portugal earlier this year for €662 million.

Staff at the commercial centre informed The Portugal News that Pão de Açúcar, a Brazilian supermarket chain, will be the new owners of the shopping centre. Pão de Açúcar group is a company engaged in business retailing of food, general merchandise, electronic goods, home appliances and other products.

The Modelo Lagoa was a six million euros investment at the time and created an estimated 125 direct and indirect jobs for local residents.

Forty pint binge kills footballer

A 27-year-old footballer on holiday in Vilamoura killed himself after drinking more than 40 pints and 30 'alcopops' during an end-of-season team break in May 2007, it has recently emerged.

Mark Drew was rushed to hospital a day after returning home from his holiday, to his hometown Gloucester, after complaining of stomach pains.

Mr. Drew and his Horsley United FC teammates had embarked on heavy drinking sessions across their stay at a resort in Vilamoura, Portugal. It is thought they drank solidly during their stay in the Algarve, on most days from early afternoon until the early hours of the morning.

Admitted to Stroud General Hospital doctors diagnosed Mr Drew with suspected pancreatitis and immediately transferred him to Gloucestershire Royal Hospital's intensive care unit. He was later transferred to Glenfield Hospital, Leicestershire, where he spent nine days before he died.

British child taken into care after mother's reported holiday neglect

An eight-year-old British girl was allegedly abandoned by her mother in a hotel room so her parent could indulge in drinking sessions whilst on holiday in Portimão, on the Algarve.

Dr. Luís Villas Boas, of Faro children's institution Refugio Aboim Asenção, confirmed to The Portugal News "A British Girl was brought to us on 17th August at 5am, by request of the Social Security and the State, through our emergency SOS Child service.

"She stayed for 72 hours, which is the maximum amount of time a child over the age of five can stay here [in these circumstances] and then left on the 19th escorted by the same people who brought her in, staff from Social Security/the State, and not by another person as some press reported. Whilst she was here she played and cried a little for her mother, then she was taken to a care institution in Loulé", he said.

Dr. Villas Boas refrained from commenting on the circumstances in which the girl had been brought in, or from offering information about the parent.

Some reports claim it was neighbours who called the police, troubled by the fact the girl had been abandoned several times during the holiday in Portimão. The girl's mother is said to have gone out drinking in the city, leaving her daughter alone in their holiday apartment.

On the night in question it is thought the mother may have gone to Lagos.

When she did not return home, the girl was placed by state services into temporary care at the Faro Refugio before being taken to Loulé, where she still remained at the time of going to press.

Another report suggests the girl and her mother had been holidaying in Portimão when they ran out of cash and then travelled to Lagos, where they may have been sleeping on the streets, before being taken in by friends.

It has been said a friend of the couple gave them a home and then took the child to a police station in the city.

A spokeswoman for the British consulate confirmed that the girl has been taken into Portuguese care. She told the British press: "We know about this case of the eight-year-old girl and mother who are in trouble and our consulate in the Algarve is assisting them."

The Daily Mail quoted Faro

PSP Sub-Commissioner Ricardo Pereira, who said, "The girl was with her mother in Portimão.

"They were staying in a hostel but then the mother was short of money. She had to leave, so she went with her daughter to Lagos which is approx 20km from Portimão.

"A couple who are were friends of the lady saw their situation - they were sleeping on the streets - and took them both into their home."

He said a concerned friend of the couple took the youngster to the police station on August 17.

"The person involved thought the child was being neglected," added Mr Pereira.

In May three British children were taken into protective custody after their parents allegedly fell into a drunken stupor while on holiday in the Algarve. Eamon and Antoinette McGuckin denied the claims, saying that they had been overcome by the heat. They fled back to Northern Ireland before they were due to appear in a Portuguese court.

Fado singer Mariza, considered the modern-day Amália Rodrigues

Mariza moves Albufeira

Considered one of the greatest Fado icons of present times, the modern-day Amália Rodrigues, charismatic singer Mariza took to the open-air stage of Albufeira's Pescadores beach, bringing celebrations for Day of the Municipality to a close with a spectacular and moving concert.

Accompanied by traditional Portuguese guitars and Fado violin, Mariza drew thousands to the beach, filling the sands with more than 60,000 people.

She performed some of the most well known Fado songs, as well as a selection from her latest CD, in which she collaborates with other great Portuguese artists, like the 'Father of Portuguese Rock', Rui Veloso.

Albufeira Mayor Desidério Silva was amongst those at the concert, enjoying his front row seat and thanked Mariza for poignantly marking Albufeira's 504th year as a city.

The evening was round off with a breathtaking firework display.

Irish developers Oceânico to produce ecologic energy for luxury hotels

Oceânico are to power their luxury developments with the 'green' energy, using the likes of solar power feed pool heating, producing their own energy with photovoltaic solar systems, and re-plant golf courses with cork trees to shade and protect fauna.

The Irish group's luxury 'Amendoeira Golf Resort', will be officially inaugurated at Alcantarilha (Silves) next month, is to be the first example of an ecological hotel, using solar energy to heat the resort's pools as well as kitchen and bathroom water.

A spokesperson for the group said, "Solar energy will be used to heat water and will cater for around 70 - 80 per cent of the hotel's heating needs".

In their prestigious, 69-hectare 'Vilamoura Golf e Garden Resort' the objective is to produce their own energy using 194 photovoltaic solar systems, otherwise called micro-generation.

Through micro-generation, the Oceânico group will be producing 686 megawatts of potency, and, on the other hand, avoiding the emission of around 486 tons of carbon dioxide (CO₂).

Vilamoura Golf also intends to install 194 solar panel systems, to heat water for guests, further cutting CO₂ emissions by 133 tons.

The Oceânico group is one of Portugal's largest real estate and golf operators, specializing in developing four and five star luxury resorts and holiday homes.

Re. McCanns

SIR, Ron Lavery is perfectly correct that no amount of adult supervision can give 100% protection against the abduction of a child. However, he occurs to have very little concept of what the law of probability is since he goes on to say, in the following paragraph of his letter, that the chance of something untoward happening would have been enormously reduced if the McCann's had stayed at home (presumably he means had provided supervision for their sleeping child). In this he is correct and it is because they did not reduce the risk that they must bear the principal responsibility for the abduction of their child.

I am afraid I find the concept that the survival of my child owed more to the laws of probability than the supervision provided laughable.

H.H. MAINPRICE, Bye-mail

The McManns

SIR, The strong anti-McMann resentment expressed in two of the letters in your letter page of 23 Aug. has prompted me to re-read the letter from H.H. Mainprice in the previous week's letter page (16 Aug.) which your correspondents so much endorse. Mr Mainprice starts by saying that the McManns "appear intent on blaming the Portuguese police for the disappearance of their daughter Madeleine". I am not aware of them ever having blamed the police for that. He finishes by blaming the McManns for Madeleine's disappearance because they left her unattended. Whatever one thinks of their decision to leave her (and I tend to the view so well expressed by Ron Lavery that parent's presence does not always ensure safety) that was not in itself the cause of the child's disappearance. The culprit/culprits is/are the person or people who took her. So this "blame" game is better avoided.

What I think irks your three anti-McCann readers is the McManns' recent complaint, made after the Portuguese police released their files, that the time spent following up the notion that the McManns had killed or arranged for the abduction of their daughter themselves detracted from following up more relevant lines of investigation. I realise that such a complaint implies criticism of the police but in my view it is justified. The evidence of the sniffer dog was important but not conclusive and a brief period of reflection and deliberation should have shown the police that there was no motive for the McManns to get rid of their daughter and that if they had got rid of her they would want minimum publicity.

As I see it the police made an error of judgement which added unnecessarily to the anguish of Madeleine's parents who will inevitably spend the rest of their lives regretting that they left their daughter unattended for 30 minutes in what they thought were safe surroundings.

NORMAN WALKER,
Moncarapacho

Response to Ron Lavery

I pleased to see that at least this time Mr Lavery has acknowledged that he is alone voice in his contribution to this week's Ron Lavery column (AKA Letters to the Editor).

Firstly, I would like to address the theories that abound regarding the Madeleine McCann case and clarify his clear statement that she was abducted. Some commentators insist that she was abducted by a stranger, whereas others are convinced that the parents were directly involved in the child's disappearance, accidentally or otherwise. But it has to be made clear that there is absolutely no evidence to indicate one way or another just what happened and Mr Lavery's statement of fact must not be taken as read, rather than as his own opinion – perhaps he would like to respond and acknowledge the latter point?

Now, let us for the time being assume that it has been proven that there was an abduction – does this man seriously expect anyone to believe that had Madeleine's parents been in their apartment at the time of the alleged abduction, then it would still have happened? That is stretching the bounds of credibility, despite his claim that "many children" have been snatched from their beds or wandered out of the house whilst the parents sleep in an adjoining bedroom (incidentally the latter comment is diametrically opposed to Mr Lavery's abduction theory). I would like to invite Mr Lavery to quantify and substantiate just what he means by "many children".

The comparison of a child drowning whilst responsible adults are close by is simply not acceptable; to the best of my knowledge, not one child has drowned between 9.00 pm and 10.00 pm whilst the parents have been close by. It is true that supervision does not prevent tragedy – simply turning one's back for a few seconds can have a devastating result, but to state that everyone whose child has survived childhood should count themselves lucky is far too sweeping a statement to make. To put it into context, thankfully only a very small number of children disappear, and I am sure that the "many children" that Mr Lavery refers to is also a small percentage.

I would refer Mr Lavery to the letter from Guido of Carvoeiro who makes valid points concerning parental responsibility, and add that by his derogatory comments about a previous correspondent not leaving their child unsupervised, one is left to assume that Mr Lavery has his own children whom he left alone and unsupervised and since they survived he condones leaving three children under 4 years of age alone in a strange room in a strange country.

Sapo broadband

SIR, If readers using Sapo to access Broadband live in a poor reception area like Messines, they may be paying more than they need to. To check just type "Speedcheck.net" into Google, follow the simple instructions and get the current download and upload speeds. Do this at various times over a couple of days. Then compare the results with the amount given on the back of their monthly bill. If the figures differ significantly they should contact Sapo. In my case, although the download speed is usually much less than 1 Megabyte per second I was being billed for 6.

I contacted Sapo on 707 22 76 (Press 9 for an English speaking operator) and a very helpful lady explained how to have my tariff reduced to 2 Megabytes, which will save me over €10 a month. Now, how many beers will that buy over the course of a year?

RON LAVERY, Bye-mail

The Portuguese Policia

SIR, I have never seen such lack of concern from the police. I admit that they are underpaid and should be paid for overtime, but they choose to be policemen, yet they do nothing about cars that park illegally like on AV Saboia in Monte Estoril. When I asked a policeman about it he just said there are not enough places to park so we do not bother. My question then is why put up the signs that say you can not park.

Another problem is talking on the phone while trying to drive. That is what hands free is for and it is the law that you use it however no one does and when a policeman sees someone on the phone while driving, they just turn their back.

Now we are having all these banks and gas stations robbed and the police can not catch then and if they do and it is less than a five year sentence, they are let go. What kind of laws are these. All these people come from other countries to get work and when they can not they steal. The police need to do more, they talk about all the people they have stopped for speeding and drunk driving and that is good but what about the rest of the crime that goes on, carjacking, bank robbery, homes being robbed and so on, yet every time I pass the police station in Cascais there are always 6 or 8 police cars there and lots of policemen standing around talking.

I love being in this country but the police are awful and the laws are screwed up and they do not care. This is not to say all police are bad, far from it but more attention needs to be paid to assault and robbery and less to people driving home who have not done anything wrong nor are they driving badly. Ask the McMann's, they still do not have their daughter and the police have given up trying to find her. This is what your tax dollars are paying for, poor police work and a 'I do not give a damn' attitude.

JEAN LOMONT, Cascais

The National Road Safety Authority (ANSR) has admitted that it stands to lose at least 28.2 million euros over a legal wrangle which is set to result in the expiry of 330,000 traffic fines. These figures were released this week as the ANSR renews its attempts to convince the Accounts Tribunal to ignore its failure to comply with certain legalities and allow it to retrieve cash from these outstanding fines before the statute of limitations on them comes into effect.

Hundreds of thousands of traffic offenders could be left off from paying a total of 28.2 million euros in fines it emerged this week.

Chaos in the retrieval of fines came in the wake of a shake-up at the DGV road authority, which has resulted in regional offices being closed and more than 140 employees assigned alternative jobs and responsibilities, and hundreds of thousands of fines are now in limbo and could be scrapped totally.

Current estimates show that there are currently 330,000 fines pending at offices of the now defunct DGV, sources indicated in comments to Público.

The ANSR, which has now taken over the handling of traffic offences and fines, is currently embroiled in an action seeking to have these fines transported to their offices, a move declined by the Accounts Tribunal.

The ANSR had agreed to pay a transport company €660,000 (excluding VAT) to move these fines to their offices, but the Tribunal ruled back in January that a public tender should have been issued.

The Government, arguing that no tender had been released due to the urgent nature of the transfer of the fines as many were on the verge of passing the statute of limitations and could no longer be charged to drivers, insisted on not opening a public tender, though the Tribunal has so far stood its ground, and indications are, it will not change its mind.

The Tribunal is arguing that the Government should have thought of issuing a public tender for the transfer of these fines prior to announcing the closing down of the DGV and hence had no legitimate claim to "urgency" in selecting a company without first requesting other quotations.

As it stands, drivers who committed traffic offences in 2005 and the start of 2006 are now not far from avoiding paying fines or facing additional punitive measures such as having their licences suspended or revoked.

Earlier this year, it emerged that traffic police in at least five districts, including the Greater Lisbon Metropolitan Area, had been unable to use their speed measuring radar guns due to the apparent lack of maintenance of the equipment.

The situation was reportedly due to the non-renewal of the contract between the GNR BT traffic police and the company maintaining the radar guns.

The situation meant that whenever these highly sensitive radar guns experienced a mal-function, they were shelved awaiting repair by a company yet to be assigned the task.

While impossible to be exact, police are thought to have lost thousands of euros in revenue from fines they would be issuing had they been equipped with functional speed guns.

According to Público, in districts that include Lisbon, Oporto, Beja, Leiria and Viseu, traffic police are using faulty radar guns in order to "deceive" motorists.

"Radars that are placed alongside roads or used in police cars are now only there to deceive motorists," a traffic police source was quoted as telling Público.

Police refused to officially comment on this situation, which is also said to stem from the re-shuffle of the former DGV road authority.

The man who knows what's what

Thomas Grünberg makes people happy, although he is not carrying the lottery millions in his suitcase. The 56 year old German is a drain cleaner, the man for unpleasant emergencies. For the last 10 years the father of three has been ready for action, covering all of the Algarve.

Golf balls in the drains or roots in the sewage system - small problems for Thomas: "Some people think our job to be disreputable, but we are working with modern technology. With the help of an inspection camera, electronic detection system, root cutters and high pressure jets we free the drains with ease." He refuses the use of chemicals: "The Algarve is a sensitive ecological system. Many substances can cause severe damage, which is why their use is strictly forbidden in Germany." That's where he learnt his trade. They demand a lot from tradesmen and the regulations are very strict: "I also stick to the same quality in Portugal." A common problem in the sewage systems in the Algarve are the 'caixas', manholes where the pipes of bathrooms and kitchen come together to continue into one pipe that leads to the mains or into a septic tank. Many times these 'caixas' are not visible, either hidden in the garden or even under the tiles of the patio. If roots grow into them, the whole system can be blocked.

So the roots have to be found, which can be done easily with the help of good equipment. Thomas has a cooperative partner for all necessary plumbing and tile works.

He left Germany in 1993, where he made his living with a car workshop and the export of machines. He runs a small workshop here as well, but his main job is the drain cleaning, with the support of his youngest son.

The 22 year old studies ICT in Aveiro in northern Portugal and is considering joining the family company. The family has lived in Portugal for 15 years: "This is our home, we have never lived for this long in one place", because, in reality, the Grünbergs were globetrotters. They have lived in many countries and travelled a lot but finally settled in the Algarve. "The good thing about my job is that I can help my clients out of hopeless situations and they always say farewell to me with a smile."

For more information on Profilimpo please call Thomas Grünberg on: (+351) 914 145 117.

Telmo Rodrigues has always put the customer in first place during his eight years in the business and tries to be a step ahead of the rest at all times. Although for many businesses the end of summer means a diminishing workload, Telmo likes to think otherwise: "Now is the time many people like to prepare for the cold season and Mister Cool is here to cater for their needs." Made in England, the Calorex titanium heat pumps are super silent, super efficient and give an incredible power output, as well as an extremely competitive quality/price ratio. Luzdoc, 24-hour health care

Luzdoc, an International Medical Service, is a thriving, ever-growing, private clinic and assistance company, which provides comprehensive healthcare and assistance to both the resident population and international travellers.

Luzdoc has existed, although not with this name initially, in Vila da Luz since 1981 as a basic doctor's surgery. In 1983 the current managing director, Dr Maria Alice Pestana Serrano e Silva, began work at the surgery, which at the time was floundering due to a lack of clientele. Under her direction and through implementation of her ideas and vision there was a fast increase of clients and the surgery rapidly grew in size from an initial two consulting rooms to twelve, and so it remained until May 2001, with progressively more specialists and services available.

By 1994 the doctor's surgery had reached company status, acquiring the name of Luzdoc International Medical Service.

In May 2001 there was a further expansion of the premises and work force, with the subsequent increase of rooms to the present twenty one making it possible for Luzdoc to diversify the kind of support offered, allowing the development of many new and up to date services benefiting their clients' individual health needs.

The name Luzdoc is self-explanatory... the doctor in Luz! But it has grown beyond Luz and Luzdoc is finding other interests and other ways of approaching healthcare needs with a more global understanding of the word 'health' - encompassing medical, psychological and aesthetic care of your body and the important thing to remember is that Luzdoc has, in the words of many residents, become indispensable for their health-care needs.

Dr Maria Alice Pestana Serrano e Silva was born in Lisbon and qualified as a doctor 40 years ago. She began her working life in one of Portugal's largest university hospitals, Hospital Santa Maria in Lisbon, and in 1974 finished her specialization and became a consultant in general and family medicine.

Whilst working within the state national health system it became obvious that there was a lack of medical services appropriate to the needs of the rapidly expanding international community, both resident and tourist, as well as the Portuguese community, which could not be catered for by the state system. After moving to Luz Dr Maria Alice had many requests for medical services and a very important factor was her multilingual capacity, as she can communicate not only in English, but also French as fluently as Portuguese.

With the expansion of services in 2001 Dr Maria Alice added Dr Joanna Karamon, a General Practitioner, to the team. Polish born but brought up in South Africa, she has since become an important asset to the quality of the medical services provided.

Also of great relevance to the progress of Luzdoc has been the Chief Nurse, Niki Medlock who came to the area for a long holiday and never went back... and has now been part of the team for 12 years. Luzdoc proves size does indeed not matter where healthcare is concerned. It is quality and caring that counts, having the capacity to understand what people really need. Our health is something that changes throughout our lives and is unique to each individual, so Luzdoc is constantly striving to equip its clinic with the best 'tools' available to achieve optimum health, for its clients, therefore helping them to obtain the best out of life.

LuzDoc offers, in essence, a modern, well-equipped, efficient, diverse service with multinational staff who provide a professional, friendly atmosphere. Consultations in General Family Medicine and Medical Specialties are available, with on-site complementary diagnostic tests, health support, complementary therapies, travel medicine and vaccinations. Assistance services for the International Traveller are offered, as well as assisted booking of external examinations, 24-hour emergency service and primary health care are offered, amongst much more. Specialist consultations (emergency and routine), include psychology, nutrition, and physiotherapy. For more information or to make an appointment, call: (+351) 282 780 700, fax: 282 780 709, e-mail: info@luzdoc.com or see website: www.luzdoc.com. Opening hours are 08:30 - 20:00, or call the 24-hour emergency telephone number: (+351) 917 811 988.

A 12 page weekly guide to the latest and the best properties on the market in Portugal • The Portugal News • 30 Aug 2008

PROPERTY OF THE WEEK

Moroccan inspiration

Casa Roma, located within the multi-award winning Parque da Floresta resort, is a tastefully audacious four bedroom villa inspired by Moorish culture. Lots of natural light and relaxing sitting areas make this property a real 'find'.

Casa Roma, number 152 at Parque da Floresta resort, is located at the top of a hill, giving it views that stretch from the West Coast all the way past Praia da Luz.

To enter the property one walks past the double garage and follows the stairs up to the Arabian inspired main door. Stepping into the home is literally like 'walking into the light' as the circular entrance hallway is flooded by natural light pouring in from the skylight above. Through the pointed arches and straight ahead is the living room, with the guest bathroom to the left and staircases, going up and down, to the right. The living room, with beautiful rustic floor tiles, is of a good size and offers amazing views in the westerly direction, over the golf course and all the way to Sagres. A cosy fireplace, situated between the two double-glazed sliding doors that lead to the outdoor terrace, will give the room a cosy feeling on those cold winter nights. The dining room, part of an open layout with the lounge, can seat eight comfortably with sliding doors leading to a spacious outdoor terrace that wraps around the villa all the way to the lounge. A doorway on the left of the dining room leads to the fully-kitted kitchen with American-cherry wooden cabinets. Huge 'Belfast' style sinks and solid granite worktops give the kitchen a luxury feel and the utility room located at the back has a washing machine and tumble-dryer, leading further to the drying area outdoors with splendid views to the east.

Backtrack through the dining room and lounge, and up the staircase to what could be considered the fourth bedroom. This room also has a fireplace and offers the same views as the lounge. The bathroom has beautiful stone tiles and is decorated extremely tastefully.

All bedrooms in this property have double built-in wooden closets and are en-suite, with each bathroom having its own personalized styling.

Back down the staircase and down again are the remaining bedrooms and access to the pool/patio area. The master bedroom is massive and its bathroom is truly unique: from Moroccan doors leading into the bathroom to the Moroccan sunken bath, created by a Moroccan stylist. All tiles in this bathroom were also imported from Morocco.

As you leave the master bedroom, to the left is a small flight of stairs showing the way to a corridor. On the right side are the two remaining bedrooms, both with patio doors through to the pool area. On the left side of the corridor is a very large room that is currently being used as a gym with a sauna and shower and the second room is perfect as a TV/Games room.

The outside area has an immense patio, filled with sun loungers, a table, several seating areas and a built in BBQ. The pool is of bigger proportions than others on the development, and at the end of the pool, in the grass area, is a wonderful Jacuzzi. As the pool is larger, some grass area has been lost but it is not a problem because round the front of the house is a wonderful garden with a wooden gazebo where a quiet afternoon reading a book can be spent.

There are many advantages in buying homes at golf resorts, such as the free use of many amenities, restaurants located nearby, safety, maintenance of gardens, and much, much more. This property is further enhanced by these advantages. This magnificent, four-bedroom villa is selling for €1,450,000. For more information on this property please call Vigia Estates on 282 690 073 or email sales@vigiasa.com.

Ask the Expert...

Q: I've painted my melamine wardrobe doors but have decided that I don't like them like that. What's the easiest way to remove the paint?

A: It will depend on what paint you used and if you primed the wardrobes first, but try using a wallpaper steam stripper. Don't hold the steam plate right up to the doors, as you would when stripping wallpaper; instead, keep it several inches away so you don't damage the melamine. Now take an abrasive but non-scratch sponge and scrub the doors with it as you steam. The paint should come off, though you'll need to clean off any remnants of it after steaming with a sugar-soap solution or all-purpose cleaner.

Three ways to...

Trim topiary

1. Before trimming or shaping a plant growing in a container, stand it in a wheelbarrow, which saves you from having to bend over to cut it. The wheelbarrow also collects the trimmings as you work.
2. Curves can be cut freehand, but geometric shapes are more difficult and you will need spirit levels, plum lines and a straight edge to keep them tidy.
3. If topiary needs repairing, cut back the damaged stems and tie in new replacement shoots. Start trimming in early summer. If in doubt, don't trim. Pause regularly to review your progress.

From plot to plate

Harvesting herbs

You need to know how to harvest herbs properly to keep them at their best. Leafy herbs such as mint, thyme and basil, should be nipped off where the leaf meets the stem. Crown-forming herbs, including chives and parsley, should be taken right back to near the base of the stems using scissors or a knife, a bit like pruning on a small scale.

For herbs with succulent leaves, such as basil, pick young or they will bolt and the leaves become tough and sour. Annuals such as parsley also need harvesting before they run to seed.

With evergreen herbs such as sage, cut off the flowers and give the plant a trim in late summer for a second flush of leaves.

Best of the bunch

Passion flower (Passiflora)

I know that some gardeners avoid trying to grow these beautiful climbers because of their questionable hardiness, but if you have a sheltered spot on a sunny wall, have a go and you should be rewarded with beautiful rosettes until well into October. Among the most popular is the blue passion flower P. caerulea, which will cover an area up to 2.5m x 5m (8ft x 15ft), producing large blue and white flowers which are often followed by yellow egg-shaped fruits which aren't as tasty as proper passionfruit. The top will die back in hard winters, allowing the roots to produce new flowering stems. In milder winters it may retain its leaves.

Other good varieties include P. caerulea 'Constance Elliott', which has creamy yellow fragrant flowers from summer to autumn, and orange-yellow fruits.

Passion flowers climb using tendrils, so need the support of stretched wires, netting, trellis or a large shrub to climb through. They need to be grown in moist, well-drained soil in full sun, or in tubs of loam-based potting compost. Apply a winter mulch if you are growing them in cold areas.

Compete for the Cup

The International Algarve Fair will this September be launching a unique competition that is set to provide visitors and participants with endless hours of fun. During the two-day fair a maximum of 16 teams will be vying for the title of becoming the first Human Table Football champions of the Algarve. A side consists of five players, though substitutes are recommended as each team will play a minimum of three matches as they look to qualify for the knock-out stages of the tournament. The cost of participating is €50 a team, with all proceeds being donated to the Lagoa Fire Department. Teams can represent companies, countries or merely be a group of friends. But as the number of teams are limited, interested parties are advised to contact Tommy Broad as soon as possible on tel: 282 380 317 or e-mail: tommy@the-news.net in order to have a shot at the inaugural International Algarve Cup.

Divide and rule

If you want to increase your stock next year, take a notebook and pen around the garden now and jot down what plants need lifting and dividing.

It's one of the easiest ways to increase your stock of many herbaceous perennials including aster, campanula, delphinium, echinacea, hosta and stipa (of course some of these will only grow successfully in the northern regions of Portugal).

Dividing stops many herbaceous plants becoming overcrowded and losing vigour as they would over time if they were left alone.

Most perennials, which form mats or clumps, will benefit from being split up every three or four years, as the centre of the plant becomes old and tired and the vigorous parts are often evident at the sides. Division will avoid the problem of the centre of the plant looking bare and will give it new energy. Other more vigorous plants, such as asters, are best divided annually.

Many perennials, such as daylilies (Hemerocallis), form large clumps or crowns with a mass of fibrous roots, so two garden forks thrust back-to-back through the centre should be used, pulling the handles apart. To further divide the clump, use hand forks or cut away sections with a sharp knife after shaking off loose soil.

Plants with woody crowns, such as hellebores, or fleshy roots, such as delphiniums, will need cutting with a spade or knife. Try to produce clumps each containing three to five shoots.

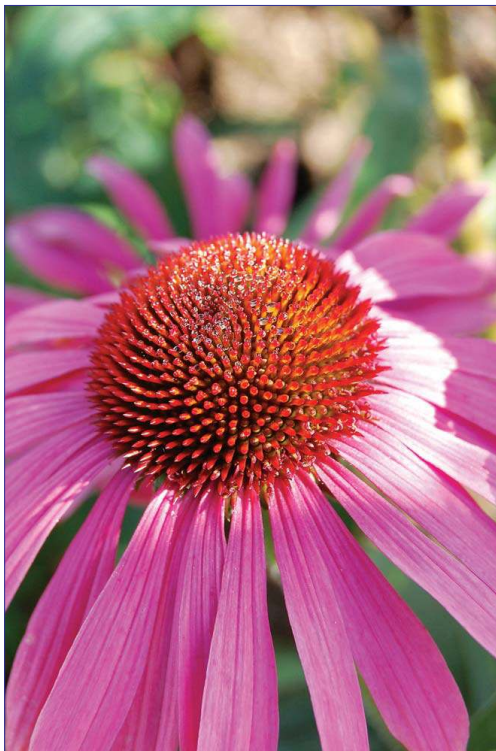

Asters should be split into single, rooted shoots, while primulas should be divided into rosettes and *sisyrinchium*s into single, rooted fans.

Some plants, such as peonies and red hot pokers (Kniphofia), hate having their roots disturbed and should only be divided for propagation, unless they are very old and congested.

It's best to divide plants either in the autumn, when the soil is still warm, or in spring, as new plants are starting to grow. Ornamental grasses, including bamboos, should be divided in early spring, when growth has just started.

Perennials which flower in spring and early summer, including epimediums and rhizomatous bearded irises, should be divided immediately after they have finished flowering.

The Echinacea flower.

Hemerocallis 'Penny's Worth'.

Lift the whole clump with a spade and place it on a piece of thick polythene on the lawn.

Those with thick, fleshy roots, like hostas, are more difficult to prise apart and are better severed cleanly with a knife or sawn into pieces. It's best to do this in spring, when you can be sure that each piece you are cutting off has a new shoot.

With most plants, you can cut off the vigorous young growths from the outside of the plant and discard the old centre on the compost heap.

Bearded irises should be lifted after flowering in the summer and young rhizomes cut from the old plant. The leaves should be cut in half to stop wind-rock and replanted so the top of the rhizome is above soil level.

By next season, you should have an abundance of new plants if you lift and divide them in autumn or spring.

Multiyork large Naomi Sofa in Promenade Stripe. Visit: www.multiyork.co.uk

Flagging it up at home

Flying the flag with stripes is a fresh way of heralding summer. We've chosen furnishings and accessories for smart rooms.

There's no better time to fly the flag and show your true colours - whether it's a show of support for our Olympic athletes on their return to the UK or because you just love a red, white and blue colour statement.

Union Jack accessories are considered the height of retro chic and tap into our desire for all things nostalgic and cool Britannia.

The effect to aim for is stylish, not kitsch. Avoid garish bunting and instead look for the design emblazoned on mugs, cushions, throws, rugs or even plates.

If you don't want to buy new homeware you can have some fun hunting down traditional examples of patriotic or flag-embellished homeware at car boot sales, auctions or fairs.

Grouped together as a display, items such as celebration mugs can look quirky and add all-important 'personality' - a vital ingredient for today's decor.

This nostalgic theme has been picked up by top designers such as Vivienne Westwood and Tara Bernerd who prove that even a few accessories can instantly endow homes with character as well as a sense of warmth and homeliness.

Once you've taken those small steps into the world of colour you could even find you're won over by another trend following hot on its heels - stripes.

There's no need to limit yourself to the red, white and blue theme as stripes in every combination and colour of the rainbow are going to be a key trend this autumn.

It's part of the return of pattern and decoration to our homes as minimalism loses its grip on interiors.

So earn your style stripes or have a flutter with flags and make your rooms into winners.

A floor tiled with Quick-Step Quadra Prato, priced from £25.99 (€32.60) a metre.

DIY News bulletin

• If you want a stone floor in your kitchen, bathroom or hallway but don't think your DIY skills are up to it, Quick-Step has an alternative. Its Quadra stone-effect range of laminate flooring is easier to lay and maintain than real stone, which is tricky to fit and keep free of marks. Available in a range of finishes, including sandstone-effect Palermo and slate-effect Trento, Quadra not only has a realistic appearance but also a similar feel to real stone.

Quick-Step Quadra costs from £25.99 (€32.60) a square metre, and comes with a 25-year warranty. Installation is straightforward, thanks to the company's Uniclic profile system, and there's a range of matching accessories. For more information, visit www.quick-step.com.

• Electrical work often can't be tackled by DIYers safely or, indeed, legally, but JML has come up with a solution that's easy and safe to install and is perfect for cupboards, sheds and lofts where you need a permanent light but don't have a switch.

The StickUp Bulb doesn't require installation, wiring or drilling, though you can screw it in place if you want. If not, you simply put in four AA batteries and insert the battery cover, peel off the adhesive backing on the base and stick to a clean, dry, flat surface, then slide in the bulb unit itself. You pull a cord to switch the bulb on and off and it's really safe to use because it's shatterproof and cool to the touch.

Top tips for... painting ceilings

• Like everything else, ceilings require preparation before you decorate them. This means filling any cracks with hairline crack filler (or, if there are floors above that people walk on, flexible filler), then sanding and wiping down. If the ceiling was papered before, ensure that all leftover adhesive and scraps of wallpaper have been removed before you do anything else.

• Some people prefer to use a normal paint roller, or one with a small extension handle, to paint ceilings, standing on a stepladder to do so. The advantage of this is that you can spot any problems, such as roller marks, and rectify them straight away so you get a better finish. The disadvantages are that you have to keep moving the ladder around, which is a problem if the room hasn't been completely cleared, and your arm may ache from holding the roller up. There's also the danger of falling off the ladder, of course.

• Other people prefer to use rollers with long handles (or long extension poles) so they can reach the ceiling from the floor. This makes the job easier but you'll still need to go up a ladder to paint around the edges with a paintbrush and because you're not close to the ceiling as you paint it, it's hard to spot imperfections and rectify them.

• Painting ceilings is messy so you need to protect your hair by wearing a shower cap, your eyes by wearing goggles and the floor by covering it with dust sheets. Try and completely clear the room if you can; if not, you'll need to protect the furniture as well.

• When decorating you should always work from the top down - so ceilings should be painted before everything else in the room. If you're not painting anything apart from the ceiling, be careful not to splash the other surfaces with paint. This means not overly loading the roller and using it carefully, but still be prepared to touch up the other surfaces because paint can splatter even if you're really careful.

An Obama-Biden Foreign Policy

Barack Obama, we are told, chose Joe Biden to be his running mate because he needed an older man, more experienced in foreign policy, to fill the gaps in his resume and reassure American voters that the United States would be safe under an Obama presidency. That's true, but it is assumed that he also chose him because Biden's views on foreign policy are not radically different from his own. Since American foreign policy still affects almost everybody in the world, that makes Biden's views very interesting.

Joe Biden, now 65, has been a senator since he was 29. For almost half that time he has been a member of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, which he now heads. He has been around long enough to leave plenty of evidence about his view and his reflexes, and it is safe to say that he qualifies as a liberal interventionist (or, as they say on the other side of the Atlantic, a liberal imperialist). He has never met an international problem that he didn't think the US should help to solve.

Unlike the neo-conservatives, who are brothers under the skin to the liberal interventionists, Biden does not believe that every problem in the world can be solved by the application of US military power, but he does think that many of them can. He backed the US military intervention in Bosnia, the bombing of Serbia during the Kosovo crisis, the invasion of Afghanistan after 9/11, and the invasion of Iraq (although he subsequently had the grace to admit he was wrong and apologise for that).

Indeed, the Democratic vice-presidential candidate has even called for the use of US troops in Sudan, unilaterally if necessary. He would doubtless agree with Obama's famous remark (over Iraq) that he was not against all wars, just against dumb ones — but Biden's criteria for which wars are dumb wars are not very discriminating. A unilateral US military intervention in Sudan would make the Iraq fiasco look like a wise act of statesmanship.

On larger issues, by contrast, Biden has usually been a voice of moderation among the chorus of Democratic hawks vying to outdo their Republican colleagues in their hostility to Russia and their enthusiasm for the "war on terror." He did support the expansion of NATO right up to Russia's frontiers (and visited Georgia immediately after the recent fighting), but he has resisted the temptation to paint Russia as the Soviet Union in sheep's clothing. And his contempt for the "war on terror" has been consistent and exemplary.

"Terror is a tactic," Biden has said. "Terror is not a philosophy."

It is a mantra that everybody in US politics should be required to chant each morning before work, even if it is slightly inaccurate. ("Terror" is actually an emotion. "Terrorism," however, is a tactic — a political tool or technique, more precisely — that can be used in support of a wide variety of causes. It is as misleading to declare war on terrorism as it would be to declare war on propaganda.)

Knowing this has enabled Biden to concentrate (most of the time, at least) on the need to eliminate the particular groups of terrorists that had attacked the United States, who were mostly located in Afghanistan and Pakistan. When he briefly supported the invasion of Iraq, he did not do so out of an ignorant belief that Saddam Hussein had links with those terrorists. It was his liberal interventionism that drove his decision, combined with a naive belief that the US intelligence services would not bend the evidence on Iraq's alleged weapons of mass destruction to serve the president's purposes.

So that is Joe Biden's take on foreign policy, and it probably isn't vastly different from Barack Obama's. The difference lies mostly in the "experience" factor, which tells you all you needed to know about the value of experience in these matters. It is Biden's long residence at the heart of the Washington political/military/intelligence machine that makes him such a conventional character.

All that stuff about Obama being "not ready to lead" is simply a coded warning that he might not lead in the time-honoured, conventional way.

John McCain certainly would, and so would have Hillary Clinton if she had won the Democratic nomination. The selection of Joe Biden as his running mate is intended to allay those fears by linking Obama to someone who is deeply embedded in the conventional wisdom, but it doesn't actually prove that Obama is too.

Barack Obama's famous remark (over Iraq) that he was not against all wars, just against dumb ones. (Photo: AP/POLITICO/www.politico.com)

There is still room for suspicion that Barack Obama harbours a secret desire to lead move American foreign policy in a quite different direction, away from the traditional great-power realpolitik and the occasional forays into liberal interventionism. That would probably appal Biden, and it would horrify the rest of the Washington establishment.

Vice-presidents don't have a veto, so the choice of Biden poses no problem there. But the Washington establishment probably does have a veto, so whatever Obama intends, Biden will not be disappointed by the outcome.

Flow of the future

Karl Heinz Stock has big plans to revolutionise the reputation of Algarvean wine. He took a dwindling vineyard, injected a healthy amount of vision and know-how, undertook a total revamp, and has created a unique winery that will showcase Algarve wine production as never before. Welcome to Quinta dos Vales.

"This was my last career goal", says Karl, a man with a past as interesting as his vision for Quinta dos Vales. He has an ability to turn his hand to any challenge, and come up trumps. He is however, intriguingly reluctant to focus on what was and now invests all his time and energy in Quinta dos Vales.

Karl made his name mostly in the banking and oil industries, having spent a lot of time in Russia. But from banking and oil to wine producing it is a huge leap.

"If you know how to manage a company, if you invest in quality technology and qualified man-power, then you can do anything", he says, "it just takes fine-tuning, like being the maestro of an orchestra".

So far things are going "according to plan", and since his takeover of Quinta dos Vales, located in Estômar, 56,000 litres of superior quality red and white wine as well as rosé have been produced. This year's production target is of between 80,000 and 100,000 litres.

However, Karl's global aim is not "quantity, but quality".

"I don't want to produce lots of it, but I want it to be the highest possible quality", he says.

Already Quinto dos Vales' wines, which were officially launched in July this year, are being exported to Switzerland, and first steps have been taken in Germany too.

Quinta dos Vales spreads over 50 hectares of prime countryside, made prime, according to Karl, due to its unique positioning, in the central Algarve, sprinkled with sea mist and embraced by the Monchique Mountain Range.

Since taking over last spring, Karl has installed 35 kilometres of cable, 8000 square metres of cobble stone, and has radically revolutionised the vineyards and winery. He brought a blend of Europe's finest machinery to Quinta dos Vales, employed two of Portugal's top oenologists – Dorina Lindemann and Paulo Laureano – and introduced a totally new philosophy to how wine should be produced.

Vines have been thinned of bunches by up to two thirds; the ground is monitored using state-of-the-art equipment, precisely controlling humidity and how often vines are watered. Water has been rationed to a minimum, so grapes are 'stressed' but have enough water to survive, a first-class laboratory has been created, harvesting is done only if and when the vine is ready and by variety, and the fermentation process has also been significantly altered.

And all this was self-taught. Quite impressive and the results are, in Karl Stock's own words, "better than I expected!"

Wine has long been one of the Germany-born entrepreneur's passions, along with sculpting and fine art, both of which are incorporated into Quinta dos Vales.

The beautiful vineyard also functions as a guesthouse and boutique holiday retreat; holds wine tasting, has an animal farm, a swimming pool, and an open-air sculpture collection, aimed at catering for the high-end luxury tourism market.

As of next year, it is hoped Quinta dos Vales will produce a limited edition of sparkling wine, another step forward for the blossoming industry and one to keep an eye on.

So nice but not naughty!

TV's Celebrity Fit Farm chef, Sophie Michell, has some summer party recipes that won't pile on the pounds. Check out her delicious dishes which will still ensure you and your guests stay sleek and slender!

Glamorous Sophie Michell claims to know how we all feel when faced with plates of delicious food at summer parties.

"Tempted and unable to resist" just about sums it up," the blonde chef says with a smile.

"All those resolutions to not have this that or the other seem to melt away, don't they?"

While 25-year-old Sophie appears enviably slim, she has previously battled with weight problems and ME (Chronic Fatigue Syndrome). Her choice of career wasn't much help either.

"I've always loved food - I became a chef so that I could eat more - but a few years ago I found myself gaining weight," she explains.

"As much as I told myself 'never trust a skinny chef' I wasn't looking or feeling great and was spending too much time in doctor's surgeries.

"After getting lots of advice and ignoring diet and health books that seemed to be based on deprivation, I adapted my own balanced way of eating."

She says her health problems helped inspired her to create dishes that indulge the senses - but not the waistline - for her new book, Fabulous Food.

After losing more than two stone, Sophie is a great advertisement for her own "sexy recipes for healthy living".

"Diet is still a swear word to me but I now know how to create gorgeous food by eliminating certain ingredients that don't agree with me like wheat, and if I want to indulge I substitute healthy ingredients instead of carbs, butter or cream."

Sophie, a presenter on Channel 4's Cook Yourself Thin, started her professional career cooking full-time at the age of 14. She's worked in top London restaurants and has also been a private chef and nutritionist to a top supermodel, but says she wants to "help everyone become a glamorous gourmet, whatever the occasion".

"Today's women try to do everything, from juggling a pressured job to running a home, not to mention being a doting girlfriend, mother, wife or feisty singleton. Not only that, we're meant to squeeze into the latest fashion in size minus-one - well it doesn't exist yet - but give it time!"

She's divided her book into appealing sections catering for every occasion from Aphrodisiac Dinners and Sexy Breakfasts through to Comfort Food. The latter includes dishes such as Thyme And Cider Pot-Roasted Chicken, Butternut Squash and Almond Risotto.

There are dishes to satisfy dessert addicts in the Not So Naughty Sweet Treats section, including Greek Yoghurt Pannacottas With Rhubarb Compote and Lime And Coconut Surprise Pudding.

There are even dishes to eat as pre-party stomach liners - and hearty healthy hangover cures for those who over-indulge.

For a summer party she suggests some "professional looking canapes, which can be made in between applying your mascara and painting your nails.

"Also, you and your guests can enjoy them without any awful feelings of guilt - a feeling that I believe should never be associated with the joy of eating."

The recipe for Pork Peanut And Coriander Salad Cups is an old party favourite.

"This is one of my eternally popular canapes, and the pork mix is great with rice or noodles too," Sophie says.

Her other treat is Chinese Spoons With Cauliflower Puree, Crispy Monkfish And Wild Mushrooms.

"Serving mini morsels on Chinese spoons never fails to please guests. You can serve a range of different ingredients and really push the limits of canapes.

"Risotto, mini ravioli and even mini bangers and mash all look great served in a Chinese spoon."

Pork peanut and coriander salad cups

This is based on a savoury pork Thai dish (called Gallop-ing Horses) served on top of fruit pieces.

Makes 20

Prep time: 12 minutes

Cooking time: 25 minutes plus chilling time

2 tbsp unsalted peanuts
200g pork mince
3 garlic cloves, finely chopped
1 red chilli, slit, deseeded and finely chopped
1-2 tbsp groundnut oil (or vegetable oil)
2 tbsp palm sugar (or light muscovado sugar)
1 tbsp soy sauce
1 tbsp Thai fish sauce
Small handful fresh coriander
Small handful fresh mint
4/5 Little Gem lettuces
1/2 small ripe pineapple, peeled

Blitz the peanuts in a small blender to a coarse powder still with some chunks, then mix with the mince, garlic and chilli. You want all these ingredients to have the same texture so bear this in mind when chopping and blitzing.

Heat a large frying pan until very hot, add the oil and fry off the pork mixture until it starts to caramelize. This should take about 15 minutes.

Then add the sugar, soy sauce and fish sauce, and cook for a further 10 minutes until you have a lovely glossy mass. Check the seasoning, though it may not need any more salt.

Finely chop the herbs, mix them in then allow to cool. You only need the smaller inner leaves of the Little Gems, so carefully peel off the larger outer leaves (use them in a salad so they don't go to waste!) Trim off the stalks so you are left with leaves like cute little Chinese spoons. Spoon the filling into the 'bowl' of the lettuce spoons and chill lightly until set.

Chop the pineapple into small dice, spoon on top of the mince and serve.

Chinese spoons with coliflower puree, crispy monkfish and wild mushrooms

"The cauliflower puree is a beautiful, snow-like colour and, if you can find the trompette noir mushrooms, the visual contrast is fantastic. This recipe works well with different combinations too - scallops would be good alternatives to monkfish," Sophie says.

Makes 20

Prep time: 20 minutes

Cooking time: 15 minutes plus cooling time

1 medium head cauliflower (make sure it is very fresh)
500ml milk
200ml chicken stock (can be made with a cube or bouillon powder)
1 clove garlic, crushed
400g monkfish fillet (ask the fishmonger to remove all the skin and pinky grey membrane)
200g wild mushrooms, cleaned of grit and torn roughly (ideally trompette noir or girolles but chestnut mushrooms will do).
Small handful tarragon leaves, roughly chopped
25g butter
2 tbsp olive oil
Squeeze lemon
Sea salt and freshly ground black pepper

Quarter the cauliflower and cut out most of the core, then shave or slice the cauliflower as thinly as possible so it cooks quickly. Place in a saucepan with the milk, stock, garlic and some seasoning. Bring to the boil and simmer for 5-6 minutes then remove from the heat. Leave to cool in the liquid for 15 minutes.

Meanwhile, cut the monkfish into 20 bite-sized cubes and the mushrooms into slightly smaller pieces. Roughly chop the tarragon.

Drain the cauliflower and blitz in a food processor or blender until very smooth. For the ultimate silk puree, rub the mixture through a sieve with the back of a ladle. Beat in the butter and check seasoning. Set aside.

Heat a frying pan, add a trickle of oil and fry the monkfish for about five minutes, stirring and tossing until golden brown. Season and tip on to a plate. In the same pan, add remaining oil and heat until very hot.

Pan-fry the sliced mushrooms for around 5-6 minutes. Season, add the tarragon and a squeeze of lemon.

Arrange 20 Chinese soup spoons (or your best dessert spoons) on a platter or tray. Place a little puree on each spoon, top with a piece of monkfish and some mushrooms.

There are two extremes in the world of celebrity shoes. You can choose between the Gwyneth Paltrows, who treasure their six-inch statement sandals, and the Joss Stones, who happily run around in bare feet.

But whichever sort of footwear you fancy, your stressed-out feet may be paying the price of striding around in platform sandals, gladiator flats or slinky flip-flops this summer.

Combine that with the fact that women strut an average of three miles more than men each day and your feet may be long overdue for some serious TLC.

EXPERIENCE A NEW SENSATION

Scholl Party Feet Foot Spa, (Boots/Argos)

"Wearing fashion sandals and going barefoot in the summer months makes us feel great but the warmer climes make it harder for our feet to retain moisture, which leads to them drying out," Scholl feet expert Claire Webber explains.

Groundwork

Lay the right feet foundations and you'll be ready to flaunt them again in no time. If you can't afford a regular salon pedicure, it's important to keep up a regular maintenance routine at home to keep tootsies in tip-top condition.

"Unsurprisingly hard skin can build up very easily on the soles of the feet so regular maintenance is key," advises Boots foot model Diana Hickox.

"Start by smoothing away rough patches every week with a foot file, paying special attention to the ball of the foot and around the heel.

"To help prevent the build-up of rough hard skin use a foot scrub every time you're in the bath or shower while the skin is softened."

Feet treats

Once the groundwork is complete, step up your feet-friendly mission with some essential TLC. Keep feet silky and soft by putting moisturising top of your tootsie to-do list.

"The key to healthy feet is hydration," says Webber.

"The skin on our feet is thicker than anywhere else on our bodies, which makes it harder to penetrate.

"Invest in a good moisturiser and ensure you are taking the time to let the cream soak in."

Pedi-ready

Your feet are one small step away from looking fabulous so the finishing touches are all-important. A file and polish will ensure your feet are in their pedicure prime.

Firstly, how do you shape toenails?

"File the nail length down whilst dry as there is less chance of the nails bending and then peeling or splitting," recommends celebrity nail technician Andrea Fullerton.

"Always, always file straight across, never down the sides as this causes ingrowing toe nails - ouch!"

Polishing is the final glam touch to achieve a pedicure finish to be proud of.

"Before polishing, always basecoat the toenails - varnish tends to stay on the toes much longer than on finger nails so colour is more likely to penetrate and stain," Fullerton says.

"When polishing on toes that are quite wide and chubby-looking such as the big toe, I leave a gap down the sides to give the illusion of a slim long toe nail."

Three ways to...

deal with a teenager who comes home drunk

1. Don't discuss drinking when he gets back, but get him to bed and wait until the next day.
2. Wait till you're both calm and relaxed, and discuss the effects of drinking and the dangers, and encourage him to be honest.
3. Don't argue or threaten, but remind him how bad hangovers can feel, talk about resisting peer pressure, and be clear about what behaviour's acceptable in your house.

News for parents

The cost of sending a child to school in the UK has risen to £1,077 (€1,350) a year.

Rising food prices have increased the cost of school meals and packed lunches while petrol prices have made the school run more expensive, according to a report commissioned by Asda.

Parents now typically spend 7.8% more on schooling their children than in 1998.

But as they'd still have to be fed and ferried around if they were at home, it's not schooling that's got more expensive - just life.

Some 45% of children eligible for free school meals failed to get a GCSE at grade C or better in 2006/07, compared to 24% of pupils generally.

Such children were 193 times more likely to leave school without a GCSE at a good grade than to stay on and gain three As at A-level. Perhaps the cash for free school meals should be used for extra tutoring instead?

A free school meal being served to a pupil at a Primary School in Cambridgeshire

Letters to parents telling them if their child has a weight problem will not contain the word "obese".

While the Department of Health now wants all primary care trusts to automatically tell parents their child's height and weight, ministers say the heaviest children should be referred to as "very overweight", as people find the word "obese" highly offensive.

Anti-obesity campaigners have branded the move "namby pamby". What next - will violent psychopaths be labelled "abit cross" because it sounds nicer?

Children would rather travel abroad than spend a day at the British seaside.

A poll commissioned by Travelodge found 53% of children would prefer to go on a foreign holiday than stay in the UK, and one in 10 had never visited a British beach.

Children might prefer to go abroad, but did the poll ask them if they knew how much foreign holidays cost their parents?

The daddy of all problems

Women have long been conscious about their biological body clocks but recent research shows that men are not immune from declining fertility with sperm quality dropping from the mid 30s. We find out the facts and how to improve a man's chances of fatherhood whatever age he is.

While women are all too aware of the ticking of their biological clock, most men may believe their potency is unaffected by age.

Now it seems there's equality in fertility if nothing else - as a new study warns that a man's ability to father children also begins to decline from his mid-30s.

Doctors have long known that a woman's fertility drops sharply in her mid to late 30s, but the latest research in France found that women whose partners were 35 or older suffered more miscarriages than those with younger men.

The study also found that pregnancy rates were lower among women whose partners were over 40.

But age may be only one of the factors affecting male fertility - with lifestyle factors such as smoking and diet also seen as significant.

Whatever the causes there is greater recognition that fertility problems affect men. A major survey of GPs in the UK suggests that more than two million men might be affected by fertility problems although many are unaware of it.

One Danish study in 1991

even claimed that sperm counts of Western men had fallen by about half in 50 years. Almost 18 years later, scientists are still trying to explain the finding.

Clare Brown, chief executive of Infertility Network UK says: "It is commonly thought that women are the only sufferers of fertility issues, but in around one third of couples who suffer from infertility, it's a male factor which is the issue."

Lack of data relating to fathers and births makes it difficult to accurately assess the extent of male fertility problems, according to Dr Allan Pacey, a senior lecturer in male reproduction at Sheffield University.

He says: "There's an ongoing debate about whether or not male infertility is increasing. It may be that we're just becoming more aware of male infertility because there's a trend for couples to delay starting a family until their 30s."

"This age group are more likely to encounter problems conceiving and that's leading to an increase in the numbers coming to fertility clinics. Consequently we are more able to identify men with problems."

He identifies the most common reasons for a male fertility problem as an inadequate number of sperm, sperm of an abnormal shape, or sperm with poor motility which are less likely to reach the ovum (egg) to fertilise it.

While men continually produce sperm, unlike women who are born with a finite number of eggs, the number they produce is determined by factors outside their control.

"The number of sperm a man makes is largely determined by what happened to him in his mother's womb. For instance, there is evidence that if a baby was malnourished in the womb or his mother smoked when she was pregnant with him, his ability to produce sperm as an adult may be reduced."

Other adverse factors affecting sperm production later in life are poor development of testicles in childhood or adolescence, or illness such as cancer.

Giving up smoking could be one of the best ways to improve fertility.

Men, in general, are probably unaware that they may be affected by low fertility or infertility. Dr Pacey, who's also secretary of the British Fertility Society, says: "Many men confuse sexual functionality with fertility - in other words they assume that the fact that they can have sex correlates with their ability to father children. For some men this is not the case."

But Dr Pacey stresses: "While there's no magic solution for men to make more sperm, there's lots men can do by improving their lifestyles to ensure the sperm they do produce are as good as they can be."

He gives his top tips to improve sperm quality and boost the chances of fatherhood:

STOP SMOKING

Giving up smoking could be one of the best ways to improve fertility.

Dr Pacey says: "Quitting smoking comes top of my list as a recommended lifestyle change.

"Smoking doesn't affect the amount of sperm a man produces but it does affect the quality, as the chemicals in cigarette smoke damage sperm DNA."

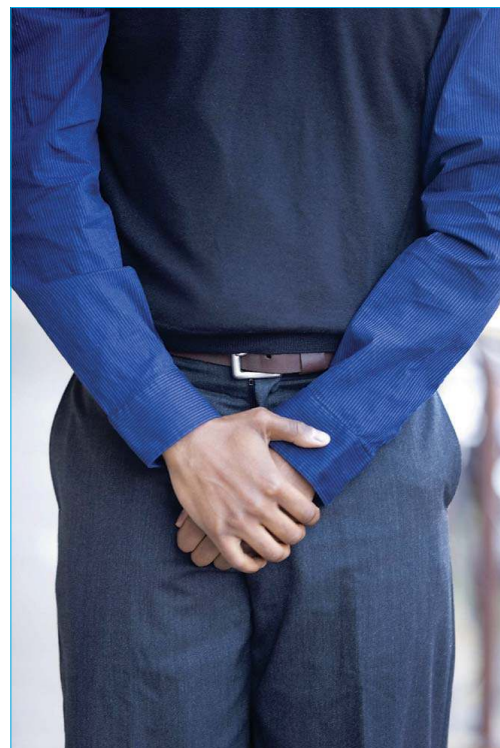

He points out that it takes three months to produce a sperm, and about the same length of time to clear the body of toxins caused by smoking, so improvement won't be instant.

LOSE WEIGHT

Fight the flab because excess pounds can cut a man's chances of fatherhood.

Researchers from the University of Aberdeen looked at the sperm of more than 5,000 men who had attended an Aberdeen fertility clinic in recent years, and found that obese men were 40% more likely to have less sperm, and sperm of poorer quality, than their leaner friends and colleagues.

According to the experts this is because excess body fat creates localised fat in the groin area that may raise temperature in the testicles and lead to damaged sperm production.

Embarrassment prevents many men checking to see whether they have sexually transmitted infections.

In addition, fat is linked with oestrogen - the female sex hormone - and more fat means more oestrogens which raise the risk of poor functioning testicles.

Dr Pacey advises: "Men don't need to try to be skinny but just to aim to be within the normal BMI range for their height and weight."

EAT YOUR GREENS

Eat the recommended five portions a day of fruit and vegetables, and have a balanced, healthy diet.

Studies have shown that there's a higher risk of damaged sperm among those on a poor diet lacking in vital vitamins, nutrients and trace elements.

Dr Pacey says: "Diet is important because by eating fresh food and fruit and vegetables we increase the number of antioxidants in our bodies which help to reduce the damage to sperm caused by free radicals."

A recent US study linked the consumption of soya products - meat and dairy substitutes and bean curd - to lower sperm counts. Some scientists believe that chemicals in the soya bean mimic oestrogen.

But Dr Pacey says: "I think more evidence needs to be produced before men need to be concerned about this."

WATCH THE CLOCK

Delaying fatherhood past the age of 40 could affect your chances of success according to research.

A recent study in France by the Eylau Centre for Assisted Reproduction found that older men became less fertile because genetic defects built up in their sperm raising the risk of miscarriage.

Previous American research has also pointed to a slight increase in birth defects such as Down's syndrome in babies born to older men.

Dr Pacey says: "There is growing evidence from a number of studies to show that men are not totally immune from reproductive ageing and that as they get older sperm production may not be as efficient, and they may produce more damaged sperm than in their younger years."

"Previous studies of couples trying to conceive naturally or undergoing IVF have shown that men over the age of about 40 are less fertile than younger men."

STAY COOL

Chuck out the Y-fronts, skin-tight jeans and cycling shorts and replace them with loose-fitting boxer shorts - or better still, 'go commando'.

Wearing tight pants may reduce fertility because testicles hang in the scrotum to keep cool - they need to be 2.2 degrees centigrade cooler than the core body temperature.

Studies have shown that if testicles become too hot - for instance as a result of too many hot baths or long hours spent sitting driving a car - both testosterone and sperm production may decrease.

Dr Pacey says: "There has long been conflicting evidence about the effect of temperature on fertility and tight clothing and although I was once sceptical I do think there may be a case for this."

"In a recent study we found that men who wore tight pants were twice as likely to have sperm that were less efficient swimmers."

He adds: "Of course, plenty of men with tight briefs are fathers, so it's not an all or nothing situation. But if you're on the borderline of success, you could potentially change your fertility by swapping your briefs for boxers."

TAKE A TEST

Embarrassment prevents many men checking to see whether they have sexually transmitted infections.

But one of the most common, chlamydia - thought to affect around one in 10 young men in the UK - can reduce a man's infertility according to research.

A study at Sweden's Umea University suggested that male infection could reduce a couple's chance of having a baby by around a third.

Dr Pacey says: "Chlamydia can damage and kill sperm. The problem is that many men will be totally unaware that they have it as it is usually symptomless and can remain dormant for years. It's well worth taking a test to find out and this condition is entirely treatable."

LOSE THE MOBILE MENACE?

There have been numerous studies claiming that the electromagnetic radiation or heat emitted by mobiles could affect fertility.

Some research has argued that mobiles carried in the pocket or clipped to a belt may be damaging by raising the temperature in the groin and the testicles.

At the moment the jury's still out on whether mobiles do pose these hazards and Dr Pacey is sceptical. He says: "So far, I haven't seen any convincing evidence to show that mobiles affect fertility."

Sensory overload in Morocco

Prepare yourself for a magnificent assault on the senses in Marrakech and beyond.

As soon as you glimpse a brochure from Exodus, one of the most successful operators in the booming business of family adventure holidays, you know you aren't in for one of those holidays where everybody sits around slowly tanning themselves.

But in the bustling main street of the Moroccan town of Ourzazat, across the High Atlas mountains from Marrakech, the cheerful pep talk from our guide was intended to prepare us for the challenges that lay ahead.

Ourzazat, pronounced Wah-zazat, translates as "no noise" although nobody could understand why. And the only reason it didn't seem very noisy indeed was that our first stop had actually been the heaving heart of Marrakech itself.

Over bread and croissants at breakfast, our guide gave us his three golden rules: 1. Don't drink the water. 2. Don't buy food from dodgy street stalls and 3.

Always ask before taking photos of locals (not that they'll want to thump you but they might demand a few dirhams appearance fees).

With that, we were off on a 300-mile trek spanning seven rather hectic days - safe in the hands of our trusty minibus driver who whisked us from the edge of the Sahara, up 2,000 metres into the High Atlas mountains and back to sand, this time in the Atlantic resort of Essaouira.

The hectic schedule on the Exodus trip was not for the faint-hearted, but a country with so much to offer demands proper exploration.

Squeezing onto our minibus for the two-and-a-half hour journey south east towards the Sahara gave the first chance to check out what would be one of the stars of the holiday - the Moroccan landscape.

The sun beats down mercilessly on this country for most of the year, with the average rainfall for September just 0.3ins and an average temperature of 31C. Yet miraculously, in the midst of the arid plains and hills, rivers occasionally force their way to the surface providing oases and vital agricultural land.

Within these pockets of green, villagers who live in traditional adobe dwellings - made from baked mud and straw - grow dates, melons, figs and apricots for sale in local markets.

Eventually, however, most of the water dries up and the Sahara stretches out for thousands of miles as far as the Red Sea. At the outpost town of Zagora, we left behind the minibus for the traditional means of transport of the Sahara.

Despite their amazing feats of endurance, camels have gained a reputation for being smelly and grumpy but the ones that took our group of 15, bags and bedding on a two-hour trek into the desert certainly didn't put me off the beasts.

Once I'd clung on as my camel rose jerkily from its knees, I enjoyed a very comfortable ride to the Berber camp where we spent the night. The return trek at 6am did give the thighs some cause for complaint but it was worth it for the magical sunrise over the sand dunes, just hours after being thrilled by the most starry sky I have ever seen.

It gave the next stop on our tour a tough act to follow, but a place used as a film set for Gladiator, Lawrence of Arabia and a host of other movies is bound not to disappoint.

The kasbah of Ait Benhaddou clings to a hillside above a dried-up river and offers wonderful views from the top. While the site totally lacks the information boards which you might expect at attractions of this size, a member of one of the five families who still live in the kasbah was happy to show us around and sign autographs for no charge, having appeared as an extra in several movies.

Kasbahs provided fortified strongholds for the families who controlled southern Morocco until the arrival of the French in the early 20th century. Another spectacular reminder exists in the hill town of Telouet in the High Atlas mountains.

Unfortunately, a complicated inheritance dispute means restoration efforts have been foiled but it is still possible to see rooms full of colourful tiles in geometric patterns from where the despotic Glaouis ruled the area.

Our accommodation in the mountains was rather more basic, what the Moroccans call a gite which would probably just pass the youth hostel test in Britain. However what it lacked in facilities it more than made up for in character.

The views across the mountains were stunning and after dinner, we were treated to an impromptu drumming session by our guide and two gite workers.

Next day, as a cooling breeze blew in from the South, we enjoyed a walk up into the mountains. Although not as nimble as the scores of goats that were being herded around the slopes, we successfully followed out guide around the twisting paths and drank in the peace, quiet and beauty of the countryside.

Just a few hours later, we found ourselves standing in the central square of Jemaa El Fna in Marrakech. Just 50 miles away, it seemed like a whole world away in its bustling 'busy-ness'. Once known as Assembly of the Dead because it was where executions were carried out, today's threat to life is likely to come from the cars, bicycles, scooters and donkeys that compete for space over every square inch of tarmac.

Smoke rises into the air above the fast food stalls, and snake charmers and fortune tellers battle for the attention of passers-by.

In the narrow alleys of the souks (markets) leading off in all directions, the smells, colours and noise are even more intense as stallholders offer up their wares. It can be frustrating not to be given the time to browse but as an antidote to the bland, interchangeable, brand-name shops of home it is hard to beat.

A daytime guided tour of the city uncovered some sedate cor-

Despite being just a three-hour journey from Marrakech, Essaouira can be up to 10 degrees cooler with the weather coming in off the Atlantic. That makes it the perfect place for wind and kitesurfing or just enjoying a few hours on the wide, sandy beach.

It has so far avoided the high rise hotels of many Mediterranean resorts but does boast a good choice of restaurants serving fish freshly landed at the local port.

From camels to seafood, desert to beach and stifling heat to cool sea breezes, Morocco provides a magnificent assault on the senses. I will definitely return before the sands of time run out - and it is dragged into the 21st century by its proximity to Europe.

ners and offered a delightful respite from the general mayhem including a religious school where students, including a former Pope, have studied since the 14th Century.

But for any city dwellers desperate for a slowdown in the pace of life, there is only one place to go - and that's surely the seaside.

BOOK REVIEW

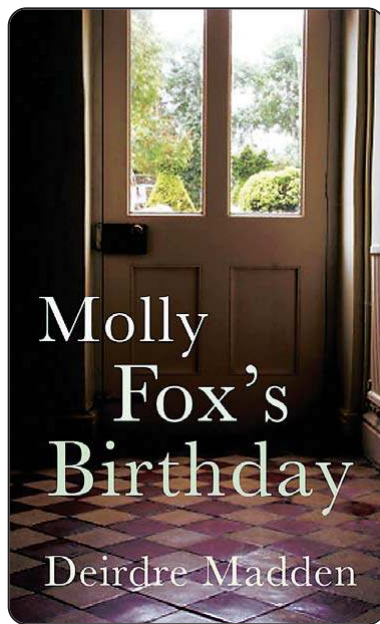

Molly Fox's Birthday

Deirdre Madden, published as a paperback original by Faber and Faber. Available now.

A Dublin playwright borrows her friend actress Molly Fox's home for the weekend, where she plans to start a new work. But struck by a case of writer's block, she finds herself taking a trip down memory lane. Over the course of the day, which also happens to be Molly's birthday, her procrastinations see her delve into the history of their friendship, and that with mutual friend, Andrew. Exploring the complexities of their relationships, the playwright tries to make sense of how their own pasts made them the characters they became. And just why does Molly never celebrate her birthday? Utterly engaging and touchingly insightful, Deirdre Madden's skill for portraying the mystery and multidimensionality of human character makes this an intriguing read.

Will they see YOU there?

The May International Algarve Fair at Fatacil Lagoa was the most successful to date.

Among many tributes received, Lagoa's Mayor said it was "extremely well organised and dynamic" and was a "good blend of various communities of different nationalities".

In the completed surveys, visitors told us they most enjoyed the entertainment and variety of activities, the little circus and music. They loved the crafts the variety of stands, the show gardens, choice of restaurants and the 'kid's stuff'.

They enjoyed the cars, bikes, pet shop and various beauty treatments. Most said they just enjoyed everything and there were many comments about the atmosphere, the friendliness and warmth of the people.

Exhibitors were also asked to complete surveys and a massive 86.8% voted the fair a total success.

Even greater things are being planned for the next fair - Make sure YOUR company is represented!

FREEPORT
TEL: 707 23 22 21
28 AUG-3

It is the not-too-distant future. Thousands of satellites scan, observe and monitor our every move. Much of the planet is a war zone; the rest, a collection of wretched way stations, teeming megalopolises, and vast wastelands punctuated by areas left radioactive from nuclear meltdowns.

It is a world made for hardened warriors, one of whom, a mercenary known only as Toorop (Vin Diesel), lives by a simple survivor's code: kill... or be killed. His latest assignment has him smuggling a young woman named Aurora from a convent in Kazakhstan to New York City.

Toorop, his new young charge Aurora (Melanie Thierry) and Aurora's guardian Sister Rebeka (Michelle Yeoh) embark on a 6,000 mile journey that takes them from Eastern Europe, through a refugee camp in "New Russia," across the Bering Straight in a pilfered submarine, then through the frozen tundra of Alaska and Canada, and finally to New York.

Facing obstacles at every turn, Toorop, the killer for hire, is tested like never before, in ways he could never have imagined - as he comes to understand that he is the custodian of the only hope for the future of mankind.

For the first time in his life, Toorop has to make a choice: to make a difference or walk away and save himself.

In the family adventure Journey to the Center of the Earth, three adventurers plunge deep into a strange new realm beneath the Earth's surface where they embark on an amazing voyage and find awe-inspiring sites amidst grave danger.

During a scientific expedition in Iceland, visionary scientist

Trevor Anderson (Brendan Fraser), his nephew Sean (Josh Hutcherson) and their local guide, Hannah (Anita Briem), are unexpectedly trapped in a cave from which their only escape is to go deeper and deeper into the depths of the Earth. Travelling through never-before-seen worlds, the trio comes face-to-face with surreal and unimaginable creatures - including man-eating plants, giant flying piranha, glow birds and terrifying dinosaurs from days past. The explorers soon realize that as volcanic activity increases around them, they must find a way back to the earth's surface before it is too late.

Star Wars: The Clone Wars is a CGI animated science-fiction film that follows the continuing adventures within the Star Wars universe, set between Star Wars Episode II: Attack of the Clones, and Star Wars Episode III: Revenge of the Sith.

On the front lines of an intergalactic struggle between good and evil, fans young and old will join such favourite characters as Anakin Skywalker, Obi-Wan Kenobi and Padmé Amidala, along with brand-new heroes like Anakin's padawan learner, Ahsoka. Sinister villains - led by Palpatine, Count Dooku and General Grievous - are poised to rule the galaxy.

Stakes are high, and the fate of the Star Wars universe rests in the hands of the daring Jedi Knights. Their exploits lead to the action-packed battles and astonishing new revelations that fill Star Wars: The Clone Wars.

NIM'S ISLAND

Adventure Rules!

Anything can happen on Nim's Island, a magical place ruled by 11 year old Nim's (Abigail Breslin) imagination. It is an existence that mirrors that of her favourite literary character, Alex Rover (Gerard Butler) - the world's greatest adventurer. But Alexandra (Jodie Foster), the author of the Rover books, leads a reclusive life in the big city. When Nim's father (Gerard Butler) goes missing from their island, a twist of fate brings her together with Alexandra. Now, they must draw courage from their fictional hero, Alex Rover, and find strength in one another to conquer Nim's Island.

Nim's Island stars Abigail Breslin, Jodie Foster, and Gerard Butler. The movie is an adventure-fantasy film based on the book Nim's Island by Wendy Orr.

HOME OF THE BRAVE

From Academy Award-winner Irwin Winkler comes Home of the Brave, the story of four American soldiers nearing the end of their tours of duty in Iraq. Shortly after learning their unit will soon return home, they are sent on one final humanitarian mission to bring medical supplies to a remote Iraqi village.

The unit is ambushed and takes heavy losses. The surviving troops suffer both physical and psychological injuries. Now, as they return to the United States, four soldiers (Samuel Jackson, Jessica Biel, Curtis Jackson [50 Cent], Brian Presley) must face memories of the past as they look towards the future and return to civilian life.

These are their stories. Home of the Brave is about hope and courage and the impact of war on both the individuals who fight it and the people close to them.

CELEB NEWS

Hollywood actor Kiefer Sutherland has confessed he doesn't deserve the millions he earns for his profession. The 24 star believes actors are paid too much for their job and admits those working in the emergency services are more deserving of the money. He says, "The kind of money generated around the industry is way out of proportion. The admiration bestowed on actors is also out of perspective. Doctors are the stars of our society - people like my grandfather who was responsible for the health care in Canada - as well as teachers, firefighters and police officers". «««»» French actress Audrey Tautou will star as fashion legend Coco Chanel in a new biopic. The Da Vinci Code star will portray the icon, who died aged 87 in 1971, in a film entitled Coco avant Chanel. It will focus on Chanel's revolutionary effect on the fashion industry after setting up her first shop in 1910. Karl Lagerfeld, art director of the fashion house that Chanel founded, will oversee the costumes - many of which will be re-creations of Chanel's own designs. The Chanel brand has been endorsed by Nicole Kidman, Keira Knightley and Kate Moss. Production on the movie is due to start in Paris on September 15th, and the film is slated for release next year. «««»» Charlie Sheen and his new wife Brooke Mueller "couldn't be more excited" at the prospect of welcoming a new addition to their family. The couple, who wed in May, announced that they were expecting their first baby together - and Sheen is "beyond happy" at the thought of having a child with Mueller. He says, "Brooke informed me two days ago that very soon we'd be producing our own version of 'Two-and-a-Half Men'. That would imply it's a boy, so until we know, we'll refer to it as 'Two-and-a-Half People'. We're beyond happy to be new parents together". Mueller adds, "We couldn't be more excited to add to our already big and happy family!" The actor has three daughters; Cassandra, 23, from his relationship with Paula Profit, and Samantha, four, and three-year-old Lola from his marriage to former James Bond actress Denise Richards. «««»» Jada Pinkett Smith and Ben Stiller turned the Madagascar sequel into a family affair - by landing voice work for their kids. Pinkett Smith's daughter Willow and Stiller's kids Quinlin and Ella all won parts in the animated movie - and their parents couldn't have been prouder. The actress says, "It was so cute because she'd been asking, 'How does that work? How does the animation thing work? Mommy, what happens?' So, it was great when I got the phone call saying, 'Would Willow like to play little Gloria?' My character as a child? She got to come in and do some lines". But Stiller insists he wasn't completely comfortable when he got his kids into the studio to record spots. He explains, "They don't like to be told to do anything, but when my son got in front of the microphone, he was good. He just had fun and he was, like, making sounds, and we were saying, like, 'Oh, be happy, be sad.' Then he started to get a little bit intimidated by the microphone and the whole thing. That's when you start to feel like you're this horrible stage parent telling them, 'Laugh! Cry!'. But I'm happy that they're both in the movie... I was happy that they weren't getting up there and going all (child star) Shirley Temple or something". «««»» Brad Pitt has turned photographer to capture his partner Angelina Jolie and the couple's kids for a new magazine spread. U.S. fashion magazine W commissioned the movie hunk to show off his lensman skills for the publication's upcoming November issue. And one of the vintage cameras collector Pitt used for the candid family photos was a Littman 45 Jolie gave him as a birthday gift. «««»» Moviemaker Martin Scorsese is set to take his directing talents to the small screen in an upcoming U.S. television pilot. The Oscar-winner is reportedly in negotiations to direct forthcoming HBO show Boardwalk Empire. Scorsese will team-up with actor Mark Wahlberg to executive produce the project - documenting the scene of 1920s East Coast gambling Mecca Atlantic City, New Jersey. «««»» Broadway sensation August: Osage County is to be made into a movie, after wowing theatre-goers and critics during a year-long stint on the New York stage. The play, written by Tracy Letts, follows an Oklahoma family after the disappearance of the patriarch. The production has been a regular sell-out and scooped five Tony Awards earlier this year - prompting Hollywood bosses to sit up and take notice. A screenplay is currently being worked on, with no budget or shooting schedule yet decided. But Hollywood producer Jean Domanian is convinced she will have no trouble casting the film - because so many stars have checked out the play, including Nicole Kidman, who attended a performance with her husband Keith Urban earlier this year. Domanian says, "So many actors and stars have come to see it on Broadway, and we've gotten inquiries. People are enthusiastic about the film version". **«««»»

Pick of the Day

Last Choir Standing (BBC1, 6pm)

It might not have found the choir of angels it seemed to promise with the early publicity, but this show has certainly found plenty of talented groups who have raised the rafters with their glorious voices over the past few weeks. Now that the X Factor's back it probably is time for this talent show to wave goodbye, but it's certainly going to be doing so with style. Which of the remaining singers deserve to live the ultimate crown? The last three choirs battle it out in tonight's live finale, each desperate to claim the title of Last Choir Standing. From the 60 choirs that auditioned at Cadogan Hall, only the best three are still in with a chance of victory. Over the past three weeks they have been vying for the votes of viewers at home, but how will they fare tonight? Two choirs will fall at the final hurdle, but one will triumph and be named Last Choir Standing. As always, Mylene Klass and Nick Knowles host the show, with judges Russell Watson, Sharon D Clarke and Suzi Digby on hand to offer their expert opinions.

Fiona's Story (BBC1, 9pm)

Most parents try to keep their children away from predatory strangers, but what happens if it turns out the one person you believed had their safety at heart might actually be the biggest threat to them? That's the problem posed by this hard-hitting one-off drama. Gina McKee leads the cast as Fiona, a middle-class woman who seems to have the perfect life — until the police unexpectedly turn up to arrest her husband Simon for downloading images of child abuse. All the family's computers are seized as evidence, but Simon is released on bail and allowed to return home. He believes it would be in everyone's best interests to keep quiet about the investigation, claiming that if word gets out, they'll only be persecuted. However, Fiona isn't sure who to believe or what to do for the best, especially as she now fears her three daughters may not be safe with their father. While many viewers will no doubt be screaming at the screen for her to kick him out and change the locks, the worried mum battles with complex feelings as she tries to hold her family together. Jimi Mistry, Claire Bloom, Nicholas Farrell and Amanda Root also star, while Jeremy Northam is the brave actor taking on the role of Simon.

Pick of the Day

The Children (ITV1 Granada, 9pm)

Lucy Gannon knows a thing or two about penning a gripping drama. She counts the likes of Soldier Soldier, Peak Practice, Trip Trap and Bramwell on her CV, and has also penned some of the best episodes of Coronation Street (one of which can be seen 90 minutes before this). So, before you discount this offering as just another ITV1 series, perhaps you should think again. Lucy describes her latest, three-part project as "a challenging and provocative drama about what can happen when children become displaced from family life by the divorce of their parents." Gannon regular Kevin Whately heads the cast as Cameron, a divorced father of a teenage boy who starts a new life with Sue, who's also living apart from her estranged spouse. She has an eight-year-old daughter called Emily, and it's clear from the start the youngster isn't exactly comfortable with the new family being formed by Cameron and Sue's relationship, or by the fact her father, Paul, has a new baby with his partner Natasha. Emily's behaviour begins to spiral out of control, so much so, one of the adults in her life can't stand it any longer - and hits the child so hard, she's later found dead. But who did the deed? All the grown-ups in her life could have done it, but which one? Geraldine Somerville, Lesley Sharp, Ian Puleston-Davies and Kate Ashfield also star.

Pick of the Day

Holby City (BBC1, 8pm)

Amazingly, Ric actually puts his family responsibilities before his medical ones in this instalment of the drama. It's the day of his son Leo's funeral, and the surgeon is adamant he will put everything else to one side and attend the sombre event. But sure enough, when a young kidney transplant patient comes in whose new organ is failing, Ric gets sucked into his work and loses track of time. He eventually turns up to the funeral, but is late and earns a tongue-lashing from Leo's Aunt Amber. The miffed surgeon heads back to Holby where he immediately bumps into Jayne, who whines about a funding dilemma she's grappling with. Meanwhile, Faye spends her spare time looking at wedding venues, all the while wishing she could scale down the size of her and Joseph's nuptials. Jac walks in on her rival and cottons on to the nurse's secret wish, and sneakily plays a prank. Later, Joseph is baffled when he gets a call from a company specialising in cheap hotel rooms and bouncy castles. When he talks to Faye, she's forced to admit she's not looking forward to a big, flashy event. Will her fiancé see her point of view? Patsy Kensit, Hugh Quarshie and Luke Roberts are among the cast.

Pick of the Day

God on Trial (BBC2, 9pm)

For some reason, Auntie Beeb has been using BBC Two as a springboard for top-notch drama, rather than her first channel. So far this year, we've been treated to Burn Up, My Zinc Bed and this powerful one-off piece from writer Frank Cottrell Boyce. As you'd expect from the man behind hard-hitting works such as Welcome to Sarajevo, and 24 Party People, this, his first small-screen project in a decade, doesn't pull its punches. Set in Auschwitz, a group of prisoners incarcerated for their faith, struggle to understand how their God could allow so much suffering to take place. In a desperate act, they decide the Almighty has broken his covenant with his chosen people, and put the deity on trial. However, time is not on the men's side. They have just one day to reach a verdict, before at least half their number are taken away to the gas chambers. The outstanding cast includes Stephen Dillane, Stellan Skarsgard, Antony Sher and Rupert Graves, who says of the subject matter: "I didn't know this particular story, but I felt compelled by the theological debate. I thought the end was very powerful and shocking. The scale and the deliberate dehumanisation of millions of people — I can't even begin to imagine the horror."

Pick of the Day

When Women Rule the World (C4, 10.35pm)

There is perhaps a certain irony in the fact that an alpha male like Steve Jones is hosting this new series, especially when you read the format. As the title suggests, this reality show focuses on a world where the female of the species is in charge, and when she says "jump", her male inferiors have to shout "how high?". It begins with eight feisty ladies lord it over 10 hunky blokes on a Caribbean island hideaway. Each week, the bloke found wanting will be given the heave-ho, but the winner stands a chance of grabbing a cool £30,000. This opener sees the two 'teams' arrive at the sun-kissed destination, where the men are told for the first time the state of play. As the news they will have to obey the women's every whim sinks in, the ladies busy themselves with the business of choosing a 'queen' from among their number. About five minutes pass before the tension reaches fever pitch, as the two groups meet and the men are set to work by their new mistresses. And the pressure increases when the men find out the women have the power to 'sacrifice' the man they think is the least useful and send him packing. Fireworks, anyone?

Pick of the Day

Big Brother Finale (C4, 8pm)

Davina McCall presides over the final hours in the compound. Here you'll see the remaining housemates discover who has fallen at the last fence, then at 10pm, the tension will rise as the winner of this year's £100,000 prize is named. So far, the series has provided all manner of entertainment. Steph was first out on day nine, and five days later Alexandra was ejected for bad behaviour. Nine days after that, Dennis was booted out over the now notorious spitting incident. Following that, there was a run of evictions, with Sylvia, Jennifer, Mario, Belinda and Rebecca all being kicked out. On day 56, Maysoon decided she'd had enough and walked, before Luke, Dale and Stuart were evicted. For some this has been the most boring contest to date, but there were a few giggles amid the monotony. Luke and Bex's often-hilarious romance enlivened proceedings; Lisa added much sex appeal, and Rex (the surly chuff) incurred the wrath of many. Now we are at the grand finale it's down to the last few to sit it out and see if they've won the hearts of the nation. Feel free to boss, hiss and cheer as the losers and the eventual victor return to Civvy Street.

Looking after show dogs and shows — a learning curve

Before I even start this I will qualify it — I am a complete amateur, I am not a show handler, or groomer. I knew nothing, everything I now know has been generously given to me by other people who know far more than I can ever know. Many of these kind people have been Portuguese, I thank them for all their wonderful help.

It is now 2 years since Cleo had her first Lion Cut. At that time along with many others I did not understand the reasons and was not at all keen. I have learnt so much over that time and now love the look, it is historical, it is distinctive and makes them so special. It does, however, make them look a little less like the Working Dog group they are regularly shown in.

Without doubt, looking after Cleo and Merlin is a full time job, they are my job, to add to my others that is. To keep them in show condition is time and money consuming. Whilst being show dogs they do not get to be real dogs, except when we have a break in the show timetable. The show timetable seems to be relentless with little time off — I seem to be at shows most weekends.

There has been so much to learn. The biggest being the way the show world works, show etiquette, standing the dogs correctly, perhaps the most time consuming is actually looking after the two dogs. The coats take hours of work, daily maintenance and the marathon preparation for a show. 4 hours for Cleo and 3 hours for Merlin till he gets his full coat in a few months, then he will be up to 4 hours as well. You can add a couple of hours if they have been 'neglected' and are full of matted fur. The car travel straps knot all the coats, the yellow fleece coats, whilst very necessary, played havoc with the coats en route to and from Crufts. Luckily the rain trouser suits do not cause too many problems. How people in the UK manage to keep these PWD coats tidy in all that rain I really do not know, my two only have to be in a quick shower and the coats are in knots.

So, over the two years what have I learned about coats! Products are everything. I have spent all my doggy owning life bathing my dogs in human shampoo, using human conditioner — always Timotei, Lennie's coat was always done using that, the Almond one made him smell fantastic. 18 months ago I discovered the Doreen Paige Natural products and started using them. I think the difference in the coats has 'crept up on me', certainly the 'critiques' that the Judges write have improved vastly since using the new products. I have so much to learn, it will take me years and you need so much equipment which I have not got. The most desperate item being a proper hairdryer and blaster — that would cut my grooming time down by a half. I use my own hairdryer.

The no 'n's of show dogs, no running across the fields, beach, through the sea, playing 'rolly poly' gets frowned at by Mum. No fun in other words.

Cleo and Merlin have to be brushed through every day at least once. You cannot use conditioner if grooming for the ring — this means that you have to bath between shows using conditioner. Panic sets in every time they do something that will ruin their coats and at times it seems that maybe for them and me a break in showing would be an idea. I intend to cut back after the summer to give both the dogs and myself a break, a few weekends at home with less stress.

Vets visits throw me into a frenzy, the mention of blood tests, my reply being 'no you can't shave a leg!!' Surgery, no, only keyhole!! There is a follow up to this after the last few weeks. Merlin has had to have surgery which was done with a small scar. However, coping with the coat has been a nightmare. He had a huge lump that burst covering his coat with various substances, blood and white blood cells. Because his coat is so long the result was a very sticky, smelly and subsequently stiff coat. It was not safe to bath it as he had a drain in — we could 'smell' him coming. Luckily after 2 months the remaining small lump has receded removing the chance of more major surgery, with his coat having to come off.

Food, it is obviously imperative they look good, which means that ideally they should eat and eat sensible natural food with no additives. Fine 99% of the time but all dogs have 'off food' times — very serious with a show dog, they can lose weight fast and then you find the dog in the ring looking decidedly 'scrawny' next to a 'perfect example' beside them. Yes that's Merlin, he will eat fantastically for months then you can guarantee pre any important show — like 3 weeks pre — he will stop eating. He will offer no obvious reason, food he was eating, he won't, his special treats are no longer special. He really does try my patience at times. He will sit in the kitchen with the other dogs waiting for me to prepare the food, looking excited about it all. Put his bowl down and I have to stifle a laugh as he looks at the bowl, from the other side of the kitchen, then backs off so he can't see the bowl and I can't see him. That's it. I have been seen forking food into his mouth!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!! You can bet once the show is over he will suddenly love all the food again!!!! Never work with children

A Windy Estoril Weekend

First I must thank all the friends who came from the Algarve to see the show which was wonderful.

The weather was quite funny, cool and so windy everything had to be tied down all day Saturday so no point in doing mad hair grooming of either PWDs as the moment they stood back on the ground the hair was on end.

There were some lovely PWDs showing, my two twice displayed the old saying 'dogs are dogs not machines' and embarrassed me by not doing what I had spent time training them to do. What they will quite happily do here became a distant memory. However, I am aware I am not a professional so I can only do the best I can, as they can. Merlin was fine on his first run out, got his Ex — Cleo proved you can train them for weeks but they will do exactly what they want on the day. Cleo decided she would 'sniff' her way around the ring.

This is not what she has been trained to do and it was both annoying and embarrassing but she still managed to get her Ex and her CCC. Needless to say I was amazed as she had behaved very badly. She is just such a frustrating dog as I hour later she is off for her walk head in the air, tail up, not a care in the world looking fabulous. The next one on Sunday morning went better, both got a first and an ex, Cleo got her CACIB. Both days the Judges were actually complimentary about them.

All competitors for the Water Trials then went to Cascais. Unfortunately due to major car problems Julie and I were stuck at Estoril trying to solve the car. I believe the trials were very good with some wonderful high points scored, well done to all who took part, dogs and handlers. Lots of cups, plates and rosettes to take home.

The next one was the important Monografica, which was held late on Sunday. Well what had happened to my two during their day of waiting I really do not know — I suspect they were tired, hot and fed up!!! I am the first one to say I am an amateur in all this — and yes I was also tired perhaps. I know that before they have picked up on my condition. But, Merlin was on a one way mission — preferably out of the ring fast, he did stand still and he did do his run but his head was pointing out at all times. I was amazed that we actually managed to get an Ex and 2nd place to a very superior dog. Cleo, well say no more, to say she had decided to do her own thing and embarrass me is an understatement. She would not stand up but wanted to sit, she ambled around the ring, she wouldn't stand in front of the Judge. This is a dog that has been doing this efficiently for ages — as the Judge said she was just not 'in the mood' on the day. She did, however, manage her Ex and 2nd place again to a very superior dog. Harry was Best in Show at the Monografica — well done to Harry.

I think the picture I will take with me is the sight of the breeders round with 6 year old Antonio, Son of Handlers and friends Tiago and Marta, taking part with Isabel and Laura with the dogs from Pedro Da Anixa. Watching him 'stand' his dog bought tears to my eyes and the picture will remain in my head as the defining moment of the whole show.

Harry had another exceptional weekend, he is a fabulous dog and so at ease in the ring. My two could learn a thing or two from him. Keep rolling Harry.

Nicholas, my 6 year old Grandson amused me yesterday, having had a weekend of PWDs, he was 'standing' my two perfectly on the terrace — and they stood there perfectly for him, as Jim says these dogs are not machines and they proved that last weekend. They are at the end of the day our friends and companions.

To briefly revisit the car!!! Well, it had to be low loaded back to the Algarve, a problem relating to a previous repair it seems. Us and all our equipment piled into a hired Renault Clio for the return leg. Special thanks must go first to Clive and Paulo for looking after us for the weekend. Clive for solving the translation issues with the car retrieval and to all Laura's family for helping us out over the car issue.

and animals. Jim is always telling me they are not machines — definitely not!

Show clothes, another learning curve, Dog shows generally are in halls, outside on grass or gravel. So I would put on black or navy trousers. It took me a while to realise I show black dogs — so I have had to change my whole wardrobe. I always have to take two sets of clothes as the ground is invariably dirty. Also, of course, down here it can be very hot, so again adjust clothes but make sure no really low tops for obvious reasons. Shoes again a problem, I have boots with heels but dare not wear them as falling over would look silly. So, I end up in trainers or my sensible sandals — again flip flops are not very sensible!!

The equipment you need for a show day is immense, cages, with covers, all the grooming bits and the 'what if' items, you really need a huge car. I did surprise myself and take Merlin to a show, with all his bits and pieces in a small hire car, amazing what went in!! Yes, I appreciate that I could just turn up at show with dog and comb but I would be bound to want something I did not have.

I still have loads to learn, my language skills still leave a lot to chance, luckily most people in the ring speak some English and are always so ready to help me. They now know I am English, not many of us doing this. My friend is always quoting the following to me

'onwards and upwards', so I will keep showing. You do become addicted it has to be said. I still have a Bearded Collie puppy promised to me when it is born — now that would be different. But, still with the time consuming coat, what is it about me and long haired dogs, I have had hairy dogs in the house since 1981!!

Check out the CPC web site for the show calendar, just put CPV Portugal into the search and it will find it. If anyone wants a chat about this hobby of mine please ring me.

Vitoria is a 3-month old kitten found in Sesimbra with one eye completely damaged. She had it surgically removed and now she has only one. This does not prevent her from being a normal, playful, social kitten. She is looking for a new home. Contact Association Bianca in Sesimbra. We are a group of volunteers rescuing dogs and cats from the streets in an area that is characterised by one of the major abandonment rates in Portugal. We have many dogs and puppies, cats and kittens that need re-homing. If you cannot take a dog home, you can help us by fostering one. We also need volunteers to walk our dogs and take them to the vet. Please contact: sesimbra.bianca@gmail.com (English, French and Spanish spoken) and read about our work at www.bianca.pt/english and <http://bianca-pet-rescue-adoption.blogspot.com/>

I am very active and full of life, as a young dog should be. I do need lots of space to play and run. I promise to be your best friend. If you have space and need a friend please call: 919 154 544 or visit AGA - Amigos dos Gatos do

Pregnancy and Puppy Nutrition

Cleo and I have not got to this stage yet — but we will, so I decided to do some reading!!! Then I thought I would pass my reading over to you — just in case you are sat with a litter of day old pups and mystified! Obviously this expects there to be Mother Dog, which I know is not always the case down here.

Puppy nutrition should cover four important periods.

Pregnancy. Obviously, a pup's initial nourishment is linked to its mother. Any deficiencies in her diet over a prolonged period will be passed to her puppies. The most important period is the last third, from six weeks onwards. This is when 75% of the puppies weight is developed, this is also when there is an efficient flow of nutrients from mother to puppies which will be beneficial during the first few weeks after birth. At this stage the mother should be fed on a very good quality food, we would recommend the Canine Extra from the Burns range.

Birth to 6 weeks. Feeding the puppies places a demand on the mother to eat, digest and absorb very large amounts of food and nutrients. This then enables her to produce the sufficient milk to support the growth and development of a number of puppies.

The following is a rough guide for the Mother — thinking of Cleo and getting her to eat this much food will be an uphill battle she is not a big eater.

Week One You may need to feed Mother 150% of the recommended feed guide. Or 50% her normal food and 50% of Extra.

Week Two You may need to feed the Mother up to 200% of the recommended feed guide.

Week 3 to Weaning You may need to feed the Mother up to 300% of the recommended feed guide. At this stage the mother's milk provides the only nutrition to the puppies. Most of the puppies antibodies will have passed from the mother during the last weeks of pregnancy. These antibodies last for about 8 weeks of life. It is important with all breeds not to start to wean the pups until after the end of week three. This progress is gradual, taking about ten days to wean them over from milk to food. Burns MiniBites can be made into a porridge using tepid water. The puppies will need 4 meals a day as well as still feeding from the mother. The gradual introduction of dry food will encourage the pups to chew, this may be started at around 5 – 6 weeks of age.

PUPPIES SHOULD NOT BE REMOVED FROM THEIR MOTHER UNTIL FULLY WEANED AROUND 6 TO 8 WEEKS OF AGE.

From my experience, Sandy came to me at 7 weeks, (the breeder was in a situation where Sandy could not stay longer), we always felt that was too young. She was very frightened for a few weeks and suffered badly from separation anxiety which led to her not eating correctly. The first few nights were awful for her — I can close my eyes and still hear her. I ended up doing the absolute 'no no' — at 04.00am I collected her and took her to our bedroom, she never left that bedroom night times until she could not climb the stairs a year ago. She did recover well but was always, to the end, very much my dog. Both Lennie and Chloe were actually nearly 4 months old. Some people find this is too old, I feel it depends on the breeder and the life they live with them. In both cases I knew the breeders well, they socialised both dogs well and both were perfectly well adjusted when I had them. They had a good sensible 'grounding and were well loved by their breeders — I feel that is the key. I have the breeders to thank for that. Cleo was 8 weeks old when she came to us. She adjusted in time, she had not been inside much we think as she did not understand doors. She was very nervous of men and still is, especially if they resemble the breeder. Merlin, of course, came to us at 4 months but his past experience was not good and he took time adjusting and still has problems going back to his first 4 months.

Age 6 to 12 weeks At 8 weeks the immunity passed on from the mother loses its effectiveness. This is a very vulnerable time for puppies as they have yet to develop their own immunity system. They have to undergo all sorts of stressful situations, removal from Mother, vaccination program, diet change, exposure to bacterial challenges — and in Merlins case a pet shop for 8 weeks with all the dangers that held. It is ideal not to change the diet too much during this time although adding vegetables can only benefit the puppies as they are natural anti oxidants and boost the immune system.

12 weeks to Adult Up to 6 months of age they generally have 4 meals a day. They generally set the pattern themselves and start to 'go off one meal. Be guided by them to a certain extent as they know what they need. Eventually it is best to settle to two meals a day, one morning, one evening. Between 3 to 7 months the adult teeth usually come through, this can lead to them taking more time eating as the gums are painful. Exercise is important but should not be instigated too early or too vigorously. Bones are soft, are growing all sorts of damage can be done if pups are taken on mad walks with the older dogs.

Digestive Upset This happens with pups, I well remember Chloe one week after arriving, she was still being swopped from the 'big name food she came with over to Burns at the time, she was consistently sick, with loose motions. Not happy at all. I rang the Vet (in the UK then), who seemed very disinterested and informed be puppies are always being sick!! So thanks for that! I made my own decision to swop her over to Burns completely that day. Result no more problems ever. She has been a consistently settled dog with food. I have always kept her on Burns however. Puppies do need worming regularly as they pick all sorts of 'rub-bish up, everything seems to go straight in the mouth.

On a Cleo note, we have many tests to get through until we decide to let her have her puppies. We want to be responsible about this. We will gather as much advice as we can from all our PWD friends in order to find the Best Daddy. Cleo is scheduled to go to Crufts in March 2009 so pups will not happen until she has had her day there. I have seen the effect of pups on some of the mummy dogs, I would prefer Cleo to be on a 'showing holiday before we went down the puppy route. Jim and I have lots to learn, it seems daunting but as with everything we approach it will be a challenge and we will do the very best for Cleo — and for the breed.

I have added a picture of a contented Mum with babes. Thankyou Dawn for sending this to me. Check out her web page on www.sharpei-cr.com
